THE Per Put \mathbf{V} , \mathbf{E} \mathbf{R}

Written in Imitation of the TATLER;

BY MARMADUKE MYRTLE, GENT.

TO WHICH IS ADDED

THE READER.

BOTH BY THE AUTHOR OF

THE TATLER AND SPECTATOR.

A NEW EDITION,

With Nores and ILLUSTRATIONS.

" Phyllida amo ante alias, ham me discedere flevit."

VIRG. Ecl. iii. 78.

Phyllis o'er every other nymph I prize,

" Oh, how the took her leave with weeping eyes!"

WARTON.

LONDON.

PRINTED BY AND FOR J. NICHOLS.

M,DCC,LXXXIX.

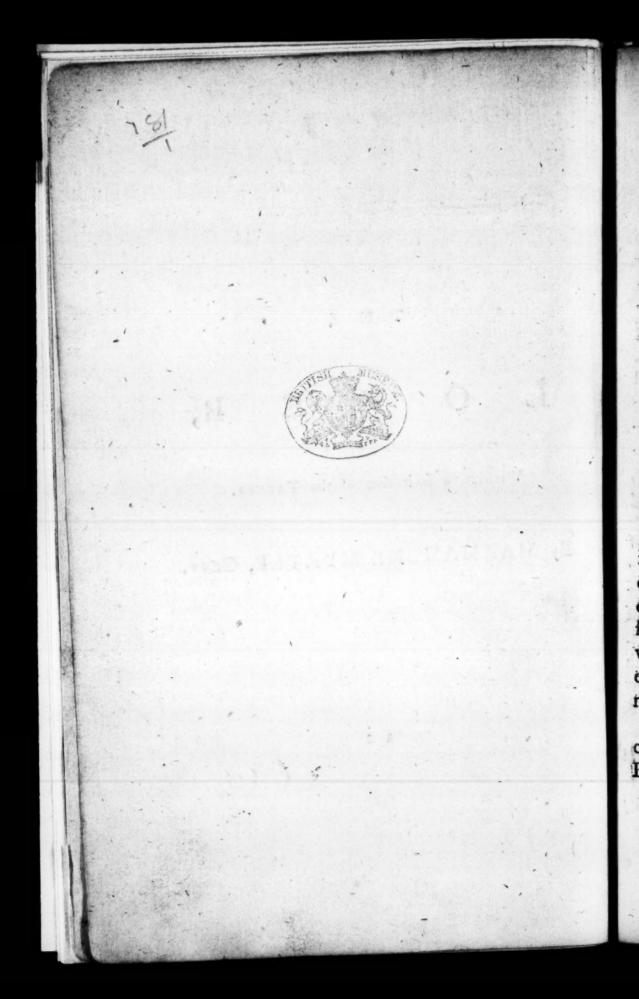

e Extended the beautiful of destination THE MARKAGE CARREST CO. contra ar nother and EUR TE ETOA THE RESTAU Amorphistus sul bon and all and the ----The second of the second of th med 404 THE PARTY GATE · San San San San

T_H E

LOVER,

Written in Imitation of the TATLER.

By MARMADUKE MYRTLE, GENT.

PREFACE

Tay bar ad to the

THE Editor respectfully offers to the Public, a new, correct, and improved edition of The Lover, and The Reader*, compleat in themselves, but of additional value and importance, considered as parts in the series of inestimable Papers, whereof Steele, eminently distinguished by his philanthrophy, the felicity of his genius, and his accomplishments as a fine gentleman, was for a course of years the very meritorious publisher or author, to the equal delight and emolument of his countrymen.

This amiable gentleman lived in a period commonly confidered as the Augustan age of England, and sufficiently fortunate in great men and good writers. The pestiferous arts and influence of party spirit that raged beyond example for fome of its last years, makes it difficult even now to fee men and things in their true light; but STEELE is exalted both in his private and public character, by rigorous enquiry and examination; infomuch, that there appears to have been no man in his time better qualified to conduct the well chosen mode of entertainment and instruction which he adopted, improved, and purfued with the best views, and for the most laudable purposes. The very contrivance and trial of fuch a patriotic plan of extenfive entertainment and utility, argue unquestionably much ingenuity and merit; but STEELE, persevered for years in his spirited undertaking with indefatigable industry, under all discouragements, and happily succeeded to a degree of honour and usefulness, never equalled by any that came before him, nor yet surpassed by the ablest diurnal writers who with the benefit of his example, have laboured to excell him. At this moment it certainly may be faid with truth and impartiality, that no writer of any age, in any country, ever contributed fo much, or fo eminently, to the intellectual improvement, and moral refinement of his contemporaries and posterity.

^{*} See in p. 285, a diffina Preface to this Work.

shirt is the state of a state of the state of it of religion, vis to your jost and religion on , residentes

Ashed to Agentudator designed to his Solida is to principle of the distance of the estinan susuesse dia san pastud anarro dibiogli fi di Ti di curatoria di santa di Cara di Cara conside. For this purpole it may be indicate.

PREFACE

THE READER.

There are no bigli the curious are referred for

THE READER was published in opposition to "The Examiner." The Lover and The Reader, first published together as the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, in half sheets, were soon collected into one volume in 12^{mo}. and a small number of them were printed in 8vo. upon royal and demy paper to compleat setts of the Author's Works. They are now republished with care and illustrations, in the same forms and with the same view. This step a consideration of the elegance and usefulness of Steele's writings and publications prompted, and will abundantly justify. With a more particular

By

in-ex-

it

in

ooth

rous

etter

le of

, and

con-

xten.

fion-

aking

urage-

ree of

by any

by the

efit of 1 him.

d with

of any

much,

vement,

ries and

ticular defign, Steele affumed a very general title for his Paper that gave him a great latitude in the choice of his subjects, and left him at liberty, to treat with propriety of any topic the productions of the press might supply or suggest for entertainment, correction, or instruction, inwhatever way he judged requifite, or expedient. The chief scope and defign of this work, will best be discovered by a general account of the paper above-mentioned, to which it was directly opposed. For this purpose it may be sufficient to quote fome passages from a more full and particular account given in the notes on the TATLER, to which the curious are referred for farther satisfaction, and especially to the notes on The TATLER, in 6 Vols. cr. 8vo. Edit. of 1786, N° 210, and N° 229.

"The Paper, intituled The Examiner, was an engine of State ad captandum vulgus, in the four last inglorious years of the reign of Queen Anne. It was employed occasionally, most commonly once, sometimes twice a week, to display the wisdom and blazon the integrity of her ministers during that period; to contrast their skill and virtues, with the ignorance and vices of their predecessors; to whitewash or blacken characters; to state or mis-state sacts; to varnish men and things,

'as fimulation and diffimulation thought proper,

al

de li-

he

eft

in nt.

vill

the

etly

ient

and

the

l for notes

t. of

as an n the

nally,

vice a

on the

eriod;

th the

rs; to tate or things,

proper,

"and just as the nature and exigencies of their weak and wicked administration required. "As it was directed to a variety of purposes, it was played-off by a variety of hands, who from the highest to the lowest, were venal prostitutes who did as they were desired to do, and all wrought, to borrow the elegant words of one of their principals, like "Scrub hange" dog instruments of mischief and under-spurseleathers," rather fortiter in re than suaviter in modo."

Some Lucubrations in the TATLER of a political nature, of which Steele was the author, of at least the publisher, exceedingly offended the ministry above-mentioned, and gave birth to the Examiner. The animadversions in it, on Steele and his politics, are penned with so much afperity and so little wit, that now that personal malice is passed, they counteract the ends of their original publication.

This work in its early infancy was committed to the care and conduct of Dr. Swift, who, as he declares in a confidential letter to Mrs. Johnson, with the affistance of under-spurleathers, penned and published the papers by the encouragement and direction of the great men, who assured him that they were all true. See Swift's "Works," Vol. XXII. p. 120, ed. cr. 8vo. 1769. Of this ill-employed clergyman, and and all concerned with him in this ignomihious service, it may be truly said, as Swift himself says, that for the value of sixpence, a woman from Billingsgate, prompted by the great men, who were the directors, might have done the business better than the best of them. Swift in his journal letters to Mrs.

Johnson, has given the history of the Examiner very particularly; the curious may have recourse to that source for farther information, or save themselves the trouble by consulting the fair impartial statement of Swift's own account in the notes on the Tatler, to the numbers above-mentioned. See Tatler in 6 Vols. cr.
8vo. No 210, and No 229, ut supra a the les position are planted with to

As and Felt of a si of or thin value (Levisua) particular is refer to the control te maceril but tremeticobne

and

By comparing the dates of this beneficent man's publications, it appears that "The Lo-VER" in the order of them, succeeded immediately in point of time to the first volume of " The Englishman."

It is certain that Addison affisted his friend STEFLE in The LOVER. No 10, is ascribed to this auxiliary on good authority; who was probably consulted and concerned in the next number. and merely for merriment might give an oblique froke now and then at the Harleys and Foleys in the Subsequent Papers. If there were any other other writers concerned in this work, befides Ap-DISON, their names and contributions have not yet come to the knowledge of its present Editor. Dr. Johnson says, it may be doubted whether Ap-DISON ever filled up bis original delineation of the character of Sir Roger de Coverly], and takes occasion to make ingenious remarks on that character, into the confideration of which this is not the place to enter

Let it suffice to observe here, that the character of Sir Roger was originally not of ADDIson's, but of STEELE's delineation; as evidently appears from STEELE's fignature to the Paper that contains the original sketch of it, corroborated by the unsuspicious testimony of Mr. Tickell, who ascribes that Number * to STEELE.

mi-

vifc

ce.

the

ght

of

Mrs. iner

re-

n, or

the

ount

bers

s. cr.

gloau

THE

^{*} SPECTATOR, No. 2.

and makes an apology for his re-printing it in his edition of ADDISON's "Works." It is indeed true that Addison wrought upon Steele's ingenious delineation of Sir Roger's character: and even Mr. Tickell and Mr. Budgell exercifed at times, not unhappily, their ingenuity in the fame way, and tried their imitative powers, and less skillful hands at filling it up.

It is more to the purpose here to observe. adopting the Doctor's idea, that it may well be doubted whether Steele ever filled up his briginal delineation of The Lover, though he has portrayed many parts of it delightfully, touching and re-touching them with exquifite delicacy, and the most masterly execution. Nevertheless, for reasons omitted or unobserved. It feems to be even beyond a doubt that STEELE with all the affistance that Appison afforded, or could afford him, was incapable of filling up his own original delineation of the finefancied CHARACTER, from which Sir Roger's was but an offspring, being merely a fecond exhibition of STEELE's delineation of a LOVER, in a form rather varied than new, and under a different name. Some years before, STEELE had originally introduced into the very first Paper of his TATLER, his inimitable character of a LOVER, under the name of CYNTHIO, where in the most glowing colours, with his very

in

in-E'S

er;

fed

the

and

rve,

l be his

he

illy,

ifite tion.

ved,

ELE

ded,

illing fine-

GER'S

d ex-

R, in der a

EELE

first racter

THIO,

h his

very

very delicate pencil, he has admirably drawn some of the most engaging features and finer lineaments of a delightful and interesting pieture, that he doubtless entertained thoughts of finishing, in the same exquisite style and fine colouring. Had STEELE been more at his eafe. and in greater leisure, happier in domestic life and pecuniary circumstances, it is very probable we might have now had his glorious conception. a master piece in its kind, equally precious for originality of defign, and felicity of execution. The case appears to have been, that discouraged by embarraffing circumstances, diftracted by multiplicity of business, diverted by diffipation, and despairing perhaps of being able to fill up his own original delineation. he fairly dismissed Cynthio from his work and the world, giving a melancholy account of his exit, pretty early in the course of the TATLER *.

The delineation of a Lover, the model as he conceived of judicious ambition, correct Love, and elegant defire, appears to have been the favourite idea of STEELE. It was probably familiar to him as being a very accomplished gentleman, of great gaiety of real genius, and boundless benevolence. On refuming the Cenforship of his country, and commencing Spectator, the first character he introduced into his work, for the entertainment and instruction of his countrymen. and the melioration of their taste and manners, was Sir ROGER DE COVERLEY, who was no other than his CYNTHIO farther advanced in life, somewhat deranged by his LOVE, dignified, embellished and rendered more generally interesting, by a variety of additional beauties and new peculiarities. When his favourite character, of which he certainly had the most delicate and discriminated idea, was violated and mangled by intermedlers in the course of that work, he was killed, it is faid, to prevent his being murthered *. It may, therefore, be very well supposed, that the idea and title of "The LOYER." originated in STEELE's defire to fill up his own original delineation, in the accomplishment of which he had hitherto been variously obstructed. On this not improbable supposition, Marmaduke MyRTLF, Gent. is only another name for the Admirable LOVER, who made his first appearance so advantageously in the TATLER, and figured afterwards fo pleafingly in the SPECTA-TOR, under the divertified appellations of Cynthio, and Sir Roger De Coverley.

^{*} See TAT. with Notes in 6 Vols. No 1. No 5; No 22; and Notes; and the account of CYNTHIO's death, &c. No 85, Ibidem. country,

fiz

^{*} The obnoxious Paper in the SPECT. relative to Sir ROGER, afcribed at random to STEELE, by Dr. Johnson, was most probably written by Mr. T. Tickell. See SPECT. with Notes 840. No. 410. final Note, on the ambiguous Signature T, and No. 324. and firem.

In aid of this argument, it deserves notice, that in the process of "The Lover," for whatever reason, with an intention no doubt, to make more use of him, Sterle recalled his original Cynthio to life, and introduces him with additional beauty in N 38. having paved the way for his introduction in the preceding Paper.

A gentleman of STEELE's elegant tafte and fine accomplishments, eminent as he was for intellectual excellence and refined fentiments. had but to turn his eyes inward to trace the principal outlines of his original delineation. Certainly he copied the most admirable traits, and the most charming beauties of his LOVER from his own heart. Such as are conversant in his writings and publications, can entertain no doubt on this head. Those who are not, befides turning to the references at the bottoms of these pages, may find abundant evidence. which may be rendered still more convincing and fatisfactory, by attending to STEELE's Papers in the TAT. Spect. &c. passim & ubique.

The letter of Cynthio, when stripped of his super-refinements and lowered to a common-fized Lover, Tat. N° 35, was actually written and sent by Steele himself, to Mrs. Mary Scurlock afterwards Lady Steele, as appears from

Nº 324-

rat :

n-

n,

as

an nat

ed

y 4

ali-ich

mi-

er-

was ur-

up-

R,"

own

tot

ted.

duke

the

ear-

and

CTA-

Cyn-

OGER,

proba-

from the autograph in the British Museum . But it feems it was usual for STEELE, in the course of his publications, &c. to compliment his friends with his own features. Of the probability of this there are very many instances, and among others, an amiable young nobleman was supposed to have fitten to STEELE for his fine picture of "The Lover." Such as are curious to know more on this subject, are re ferred to the Edition of the Tar. with notes in fix Vols. cr. 8vo. 1786; Notes on CYNTHIO possim, and particularly to Nº 85, and Note.

The letter of Courty of Males Bainbec stilled and in Wirall , a well have at horateland same divide box to hear red base and no hear result residently of him realizations

THE

bi T

tic

the

BO

^{*} See STEELE's " Letters," Vol. I. Lett. II, p. 2. and Note.

To Sir SAMUEL GARTH*.

SiR,

the nent pro-

his

e re es in

HIO

d Note.

HE

A S foon as I thought of making the Lover a present to one of my friends, I resolved, without farther distracting my choice, to send it to the best-natured man †. You are so universally known for this character, that an epistle so directed would find its way to you without your name; and I believe nobody but you yourself would deliver such a superscription to any other person.

*SAMUEL GARTH, M. D. the celebrated author of "The Dispensaty."—The first edition of this admirable poem came out in 1694; and went through three impressions in a few months. This extraordinary encouragement put him upon making several improvements in it; and in 1706 he published a fourth edition, with several additions. Major PACK observes, that "The "Dispensary had lost and gained in every edition; almost every thing that Sir Samuel left out being a robbery from the publick; whilst every thing that he added was an embellishment to his poem." On the accession of King George I. he had the honour of being knighted with the Duke of Marleborough's sword. He died Jan. 18, 1718-19.

† "Well-natur'd GARTH inflam'd with early praise." Says Pope in his "Epistle to Arbuthnot;" and in his "Fare-well to London," calls him

" The best good Christian, though he knows it not."

B

This propensity is the nearest a-kin to love; and good-nature is the worthiest affection of the mind, as love is the noblest passion of it: while the latter is wholly employed in endeavouring

The same sentiment Pope expresses afterward in prose: "The best-natured of men, Sir Samuel Garth, has lest me in the truest concern for his loss. His death was very heroical, and yet unaffected enough to have made a Saint or a Philosopher famous: but ill tongues, and worse hearts, have branded even his last moments, as wrongfully as they did his life, with irresiligion. You must have heard many tales on this subject; but if ever there was a good Christian, without knowing himself to be so, it was Dr. Garth." Pope's Works, vol. VI. p. 90.— Pope afterwards declared himself convinced that Garth died in the communion of the church of Rome, having been privately reconciled." Dr. Johnson's Life of Garth.

The Doctor remarks on the preceding testimonial of Garth's Christianity, "that POPE seems not able to deny, what he is " angry to hear, and loth to confess."

The following curious passage from a late publication deserves notice. "ADDISON had given Bishop Berkeley an account of " their common friend Dr. Garth's behaviour in his last illness, "which was equally unpleasing to both those excellent advo-" cates for revealed religion " When Addison talked seriously to Garth about preparing for his approaching diffolution, the Doctor faid, Surely I have good reason not to believe those trifles, fince Dr. Halley, who has dealt so much in demonstration, has affured me, that the doctrines of Christianity are incomprehensible, and the religion itself an imposture. Bishop Berkeley took arms against this redoubtable dealer in demonstration; and addressed "The Analyst" to him, with a view of shewing, that mysteries in faith were unjustly objected to, by mathematicians, who admitted much greater mysteries and even falshoods in science, of which he endeavoured to prove that Fluxions furnished an eminent example. " Memoirs of G. Berkeley, D. D." 2d Edit. 800 1784, p. 30, &c. See also TATLER with notes, Vol. III. No 79, p. 30, & Seq.

to

too

diff

gra

wha

·imp to a

han

plea

gui

to h

to t fam

OI

ven

to t

you

grou

guil

the

as co tient

weal

read

to th

if th

T

to make happy one fingle object, the other diffuses its benevolence to all the world.

As this is your natural bent, I cannot but congratulate to you the fingular felicity that your profession is so agreeable to your temper. For what condition is more desirable than a constant impulse to relieve the distressed, and a capacity to administer that relief? When the sick man hangs his eye on that of his physician, how pleasing must it be to speak comfort to his anguish, to raise in him the first motions of hope, to lead him into a persuasion that he shall return to the company of his friends, the care of his samily, and all the blessings of being?

The manner in which you practife this heavenly faculty of aiding human life, is according to the liberality of science, and demonstrates that your heart is more set upon doing good than growing rich.

The pitiful artifices which empiricks are guilty of, to drain cash out of valetudinarians, are the abhorrence of your generous mind; and it is as common with GARTH to supply indigent patients with money for food, as to receive it from wealthy ones for physick. How much more amiable, Sir, would the generosity which is already applauded by all that know you, appear to those whose gratitude you every day resuse, if they knew that you resist their presents lest R 2

to

ve;

the

hile

ing

The

n the

, and opher

even

irre-

imfelf

90.-

died

arth's

t he is ferves

unt of illness, advo-

rioufly

n, the

trifles,

and the

against n faith

d much

he en-

p. 30,

30, 8

you should supply those whose wants you know, by taking from those with whose necessities you are unacquainted!

of

by

ha

the

no ad

Co

wh

ma

The families you frequent receive you as their friend and well-wisher, whose concern in their behalf is as great as that of those who are related to them by the ties of blood and the sanctions of affinity. This tenderness interrupts the satisfactions of conversation, to which you are so happily turned; but we forgive you that our mirth is often insipid to you, while you sit absent to what passes amongst us from your care of such as languish in sickness. We are sensible their distresses, instead of being removed by company, return more strongly to your imagination by comparison of their condition to the jollities of health.

But I forget I am writing a dedication; and in an address of this kind, it is more usual to celebrate mens great talents, than those virtues to which such talents ought to be subservient; yet where the bent of a man's spirit is taken up in the application of his whole force to serve the world in his profession, it would be frivolous not to entertain him rather with thanks for what he is, than applauses for what he is capable of being. Besides, Sir, there is no room for saying any thing to you, as you are a man of wit, and a great poet; all that can be spoken that is worthy

·WC

NOU

neir

neir

re-

anc-

the

are our abe of

by

agi-

and

tues
ient;
in up
we the colous what ole of r fayf wit,
that is worthy an ingenuous spirit, in the celebration of such faculties, has been incomparably said by yourself to others, or by others to you: you have never been excelled in this kind but by those who have written in praise of you: I will not pretend to be your rival even with such an advantage over you; but, assuring you, in Mr. Codrington's words +, that I do not know whether my love or admiration is greater, I remain, Sir,

Your most faithful friend, and most obliged, humble servant,

RICHARD STEELE.

† "Thou hast no faults, or I no faults can spy:
"Thou art all beauty, or all blindness I." Codring ton to Dr. Garth, before The Dispensary.

B 3

THE

Lour moit faintful friend.

and not obliged, himbie fervant, даватЗ филион/

tagle men entered on I to gettend on Beet conflict othered lis ve vages of its marcoll' w . . Conning was to David the chart The Differ for p.

tten

of th

By

Virg Virg

thors ent i world wit,

T H E

L O V E R,

Written in imitation of the TATLER,

By MARMADUKE MYRTLE, Gent.

No 1. Thursday, February 25, 1714.

Virginibus puerisque canto. Hor. 3 Od. i. 4. Virgins and blooming youths, attend my lyre!

B. BOOTH.

HERE have been many and laudable endeavours of late years, by fundry Authors, under different characters, and of different inclinations and capacities, to improve the world, by half-sheet advertisements, in learning, wit, and politicks; but these works have not attentively enough regarded the softer affections of the mind, which, being properly raised and B 4 awakened.

awakened, make way for the operation of all good arts.

After mature deliberation with myself upon this subject, I have thought, that, if I could trace the paffion or affection of love through all its joys and inquietudes, through all the stages and circumstances of life, in both fexes, with strict respect to virtue and innocence, I should, by a just representation and history of that one passion, steal into the bosom of my reader, and build upon it all the fentiments and resolutions which incline and qualify us for every thing that is truly excellent, great and noble.

All you, therefore, who are in the dawn of life, as to conversation with a faithless and art. ful world, attend to one who has passed through almost all the mazes of it, and is familiarly acquainted with whatever can befall you in the pursuit of love: if you diligently observe me, I will teach you to avoid the temptations of lawless defire, which leads to shame and forrow; and carry you into the paths of love, which will conduct you to honour and happiness. This paffion is the fource of our being, and, as it is fo, it is also the support of it; for all the adventures which they meet with, who swerve from love, carry them so far out of the way of their true being, which cannot pleafingly pass bened.

Nº I on v hono

M write all n for from reafc of t is to vour be I fpok or to is eit defir . M cond which able are a uper all t

It be d man now day nam f all pon

ould

ugh

the

exes,

ry of

my

and

and

n of art.

ough

the

me,

s of row;

hich

ness.

d, as

l the

erve y of pass

on

on when it has deviated from the rules of honourable passion.

My purpose, therefore, under this title, is to write of such things only which ought to please all men, even as men; and I shall never hope for prevailing under this character of Lover from my force in the reason offered, but as that reason makes for the happiness and satisfaction of the person to whom I address. My reader is to be my mistress; and I shall always endeavour to turn my thoughts so as that there shall be nothing in my writings too severe to be spoken before one unacquainted with learning, or too light to be dwelt upon before one who is either fixed already in the paths of virtue, or desirous to walk in them for the future.

My affistants, in this work, are persons whose conduct of life has turned upon the incidents which have occurred to them from this agreeable or lamentable passion, as they respectively are apt to call it, from the impression it has left upon their imaginations, and which mingles in all their words and actions.

It cannot be supposed the gentlemen can be called by their real names in so public a manner as this is. But the hero of my story, now in the full bloom of life, and seen every day in all the places of resort, shall bear the name of one of our British rivers, which washes washes his estate. As I design this Paper shall be a picture of familiar life, I shall avoid words derived from learned languages, or ending in foreign terminations: I shall shun also names significant of the person's character of whom I talk; a trick used by play-wrights, which I have long thought no better a device than that of under-writing the name of an animal on a post, which the painter conceived too delicately drawn to be known by common eyes, or by his delineation of its limbs.

Mr. Severn is now in the twenty-fifth year of his age, a gentleman of great modesty and courage, which are the radical virtues which lay the folid foundation for a good character and behaviour both in publick and private. I will not, at this time, make the reader any further acquainted with him than from this particular, that he extreamly affects the conversation of people of merit who are advanced in years, and treats every woman of condition, who is past being entertained on the foot of homage to her beauty, fo respectfully, that in his company she can never give herself the compunction of having loft any thing which This natural goodness made her agreeable. has gained him many hearts, which have agreeable persons to give with them: I mean, mothers thers fonds their morn ward distant proper fure) but of

Nost

engag M him o who a read not f from imme good mark in ge tall, v lor ur marry and h obser is not very

to ch

N° 1.
Paper shall ages, shun acter ghts, evice aniyear and hich acter furpar-erfation, ot of at in the d in hich lness gree.

mothers have a fondness for him, and wish that fondness could be gratified by his passion to their daughters. Were you to visit him in a morning, you would certainly find some awkward thing of business, some old steward, or distant retainer to a great family, who has a proposal to make to him, not (you may be sure) coming from the person who sent him, but only in general to know whether he is engaged.

Mr. Severn has at this time patterns fent him of all the young women in Town; and I. who am of his council in these matters, have read his particulars of women brought him. not from professed undertakers that way, but from those who are under no necessity of selling immediately, but fuch who have daughters a good way under twenty, that can flay for a market, and fend in their account of the lady in general terms only: as, that she is so old, so tall, worth fo much down, and has two batchelor unkles (one a rich merchant) that will never marry; her maiden-aunt loves her mightily. and has very fine jewels, and the like. I have observed in these accounts, when the fortune is not fuitable, they fubjoin a postscript, she is very handsome; if the is rich and defective as to charms, they add, she is very good.

But

But I was going to fay, that Mr. SEVERN, having the good sense to affect the conversation of those elder than himself, passes some time at a club, which (with himself) consists of sive; whom we shall name as follows.

Mr. Oswald, a widower, who has within these sew months buried a most agreeable woman, who was his beloved wife, and is indulged by this company to speak of her in the terms she deserved of him, with allowance to mingle family-tales concerning the merit of his children, and the ways and methods he designs to take, to support a painful and lonely being after the loss of this companion, which tempered all his forrows, and gave new sense and spirit to his satisfactions.

Mr. Mullet, a gentleman, who in the most plentiful fortune seems to taste very little of life, because he has lost a lady whom he passionately loved, and by whom he had no children; he is the last of a great house, and, though he wants not many months of sifty, is much sought by ladies as bright as any of the sex; but, as he is no sool, but is sensible they compare his years with their own, and have a mind to marry him, because they have a mind to bury him; he is as froward, exceptious and humoursome as e'er a beauty of them

No r.
them
well wom cafe perh
they dead to m man
than has a fubje are i futu mest rest mift

Will the poin min eafir min feste

to th fation me at five;

Nº I

ERN,

ulged terms ingle chilgns to after it to most le of n he d no and, sy, is ny of nsible have exty of them them all: I, who am intimate with MULLET as well as SEVERN, know that many of the same women have been offered to him of fifty, in case of losing him of five and twenty; and some perhaps in hopes of having them both: for they prudently judge, that when MULLET is dead, it may then be time enough for SEVERN to marry; and a lady's maid can observe that many an unlikelier thing has come to pass, than this view of marriage between her young mistress and both those gentlemen.

Mr. Johnson is a gentleman happy in the conversation of an excellent wife, by whom he has a numerous offspring; and the manner of subjecting his desires to his circumstances, which are not too plentiful, may give occasion in my future discourses to draw many incidents of domestic life, which may be as agreeable to the rest of the young men of this nation, as they are to the well disposed Mr. Severn.

The fourth man of this little affembly is Mr. Wildoose, an old batchelor, who has lived to the 53d year of his age, after being disappointed in love at his 23d. That torment of mind frets out in little distaissactions and uneasinesses against every thing else, without administering remedy to the ail itself, which still festers in his heart, and would be insupportable, were it not cooled by the society of the others abor ..

it wo

quali

bibli

nied

not o

out;

if I

have

who mor

than

folat

and

figh

lievi

as c

and of A

fpar

wor

me,

the

nitu

perf

or (

now

abovementioned. A poor old maid is one, who has long been the object of ridicule, her humours and particularities afford much matter to the facetious; but the old batchelor has ten times more of the fplenetic and ridiculous, as he is conversant in larger scenes of life, and has more opportunities to diffuse his folly, and confequently can vex and delight people in more views, than an ancient virgin of the other fex.

The fifth and last of his company, is my dear felf, who oblige the world with this work. But as it has been frequently observed, that the fine gentleman of a play has always fomething in him which is of near alliance to the real character of the author, I shall not pretend to be wholly above that pleasure; but shall in the next Paper principally talk of myself, and fatisfy my readers how well I am qualified to be the fecretary of love. I had ordered my bookfeller to adorn the head of my paper with little pretty broken arrows, fans thrown away, and other enfigns armorial of the ifle of Paphos, for the embellishment of my work; but as I am a young author, and pretend to no more than a happy imitation of one who went before me, he would not be at that charge; when I failed there, I defired him only to let the Paper be gilded; but he faid that was a new thing, and

who

hu-

atter

s ten

s, as has

con-

more

other

dear

But

e fine

him

arac-

o be next

itisfy

the

ook-

little

and

, for

am a

an a

e, he failed

r be

, and

it

it would be taken to be written by a person of quality, which, I know not for what reason, the bibliopoles are also very averse to, and I was denied my second request. However, this did not discourage me, and I was resolved to come out; not without some particular hopes, that if I had not so many admirers, I might possibly have more customers than my predecessor, whom I profess to imitate; for there are many more who can feel what will touch the heart, than receive what would improve the head.

I therefore defign to be the comfort and confolation of all perfons in a languishing condition, and will receive the complaints of all the faithful fighers in city, town, or country; firmly believing, that, as bad as the world is, there are as constant ones within the cities of London and Westminster, as ever wandered in the plains of Arcadia.

I shall in my next Paper (as much as I can spare of it, from talking of myself) tell the world how to communicate their thoughts to me, which will very properly come in with the description of my apartment, and the surniture of it, together with the account of my person, which shall make up the second Paper or chapter, and shall be placed before the Errata of this. I have nothing surther to say now, but am willing to make an end of this leaf

Nº 2

on t

which

info

beca

does

then

whe

weal

fpea

I clo

PAG well folat has 1 to it the i

they moft

a ch inca

had ing i foon

left

been

plied

muc

all 1

rid o

leaf as quaintly as possible, being the first; and therefore would have it go off like an act in a play, with a couplet; but the spirit of that will be wholly in the power of the reader, who must quicken his voice hereabouts, like an actor at his Exit, helping an empty verse with lively hand, foot, and voice, at once; and if he is reading to ladies, fay brifkly, that, with regard to the greatest part of mankind,

" Foreign is every character befide;

" But that of Lover every man has try'd."

N° 2. Saturday, February 27, 1714.

-" Mentis gratissimus error. Hon. 2 Ep. ii. 140. " The sweet delusion of the mind."

W. DUNCOMBE.

Cannot tell how many years, months, hours, days, or minutes, have passed away since I first faw Mrs. Ann Page; but certain I am, that they have run by me, without my being much concerned in what was transacted in the world around me all that while. Mrs. PAGE, being a gentlewoman on whom I have ever doated to distraction, has made me very particular in my behaviour upon all the occurences

OM

and in a will must or at ively he is gard

. 140.

MBE. ours, ince I am, being in the AGE, ever y par-

rences

OM

on this earth, and negligent of those things in which others terminate all their care and study; infomuch, that I am very fenfible it is only because I am harmless, that the busy world does not lock me up; for if they will not own themselves mad, they must conclude I am, when they fee me cold to the pursuits of riches, wealth, and power; and when people have been speaking of great persons and illustrious actions, I close the whole with something about Mrs. PAGE, they are apt to think my head turned, as well as I do that theirs is. However, I find confolation in the fimplicity of my diffress (which has banished all other cares), and am reconciled to it. But however I may be looked upon by the filly crowds, who are toiling for more than they want, I am, without doubt, in myself, the most innocent of all creatures; and a squirrel in a chain, whose teeth are cut out, is not more incapable of doing mischief. Mrs. Ann Page had fuch a turn with her neck, when I, thinking no harm, first looked upon her, that I was foon after in a fever, and had like to have left a world (which I ever fince despised) and been at rest. But as Mrs. Ann's parents complied with her own passion for a gentleman of much greater worth and fortune than myself, all that was left for me was to lament or get rid of my passion by all the diversions and entertainments

No a

pafl

the

upo

give

tiva

very

pley

will

that eftee

gord

the

of t

which

jest

and

and in w mali

gent

itself

was

char

moft

ofter wick

of th

hour

tertainments I could. But I thank Mrs. Anne* (I am still calling her by her maiden name) she has always been civil to me, and permitted me to stand god-father at the baptism of one of her sons.

This would appear a very humble favour to a man of ungoverned defire; but as for me, as foon as I found Mrs. Anne was engaged, I could not think of her with hope any longer, any other ways than that I should ever be ready to express the passion I had for her, by civilities to any thing that had the most remote relation to her. But, alas! I am going on as if every body living was acquainted with Mrs. Anne PAGE and myself, when there is indeed no occafion of mentioning either; but to inform the reader, that it is from the experience of a patient, I am become a physician in love. I have been in it thirty years, just as long as the learned Sydenham had the gout; and though I cannot pretend to make cures, I can, like him, put you in a good regimen when you are down in a fit. As I was faying, this affection of mine left behind it a fcorn of every thing else; and having an aversion to business, I have

paffed

^{*} That young women were, at this time, usually styled Mrs. has been repeatedly shewn in the TATLER. It may be new to observe, that it appears from the register-books of St. Bride's, London, that early in the last century children were so denominated when their names were recorded in baptism. See TAT. with Notes, Vol. I. No 10, and No 13.

nitted one of

Nº 2.

our to he, as could , any he dy to vilities lation every ANNE no octom the a pa-I have as the hough

I like ou are fection thing I have

led Mrs.
e new to Bride's,
denomiee TAT.

paffed

paffed my time very much in observation upon the force and influence this passion has had upon other men, and the different turns it has given each respective generation, from the cultivation or abuse of it. You'll say I fell into very unhappy days for a lover of my complexion, who can be fatisfied with diffant goodwill from the person beloved, and am contented that her circumstances can allow me only her esteem, when I acquaint you that my most vigorous years were passed away in the reign of the amorous Charles the Second. The licences of that court did not only make that love, which the vulgar call romantic, the object of jest and ridicule, but even common decency and modefly were almost abandoned as formal and unnatural. The writers for the stage fell in with the court, and the theatre diffused the malignity into the minds of the nobility and gentry, by which means the degeneracy spread itself through the whole people, and shame itself was almost lost: naked Innocence, that most charming of beauties, was confronted by that most hideous of monsters, barefaced Wickedness.

This made me place all my happiness in hours of retirement; and as great distresses often turn to advantages, I impute it to the wickedness of the age, that I am a great master of the bass-viol.

C 2

With

gen

for

wan

the

und

Mr.

of fa

the walk

melo

pref

the !

by '

write

com

for

tures

respe

neith

Love

my h

notio

and t

destr

notor

no m

he th

are u

With this instrument I have passed many a heavy hour, and laid up treasures of knowledge, drawn from contemplation, on what I had feen every day in the world, during the intervals from mufick and reading, which took up the principal part of my time. purpose, at present, is to be a Knight-errant with the pen, fince that order of men, who were fo with their fwords, are quite laughed out of the world. My bufiness is to kill monsters, and to relieve virgins; but as it has been the custom, time out of mind, for knights, who take upon them fuch laudable and hazardous labours, to have a castle, a mote round it, and all other conveniencies within themselves, it has luckily happened, that the spacious and magnificent apartment, which the ingenious Mr. Powell * lately possessed in Covent-Garden, has lately been relinquished by him, upon fome importunate words and menaces given him by a gentleman who has the fovereignty of it, by virtue of some enchanted rolls of parchment which convey that manfion unto the faid chief commander, vulgarly called a landlord. By this means, you are to understand, that the apartment, wherein the little kings and queens lately diverted fo many of our nobility and gentry,

^{*} For the flory of this man, and this transaction, see the Notes on the new TATLER. passim.

Nº 2. nany a knowwhat luring which My errant o were out of nfters, en the , who ardous t, and it has nagnis Mr. arden, upon given nty of parchne faid dlord. at the queens

the Notes

y and

entry,

gentry, is now mine. This spacious gallery, for fuch I have made it for my musings and wanderings of thought, I have dignified with the name of "The Lover's Lodge," where, under fancied skies, and painted clouds, left by Mr. Powell, I fit and read the true histories of famous knights and beautiful damfels, which the ignorant call romances. To make my walk more gloomy, and adapted both for melody and fadness, there lies before me, at present, a death's head, my bass-viol, and the history of "Grand Cyrus." I cannot tell by what chance I have also some ridiculous writers in my study, for I have an aversion for comicks, and those they call pleasant fellows, for they are insensible of Love. Those creatures get into a familiarity with ladies, without respect on either fide; and consequently can neither see what is amiable, or be the objects of Love. I wonder how these buffoons came into my head. But I was going to intimate, that the notions of gallantry are turned topfic-turvey, and the knight-errantry of this profligate age is destroying as many women as they can. It is notorious, that a young man of condition does no more than is expected from him, if, before he thinks of fettling himfelf in the world, he is the ruin of half a dozen females, whose fortunes are unequal to that which his laborious ancestors, whether successful in virtue or iniquity, have left him.

C 3

Thus I every day fee innocents abused, scorned, betrayed, and neglected by brutes, who have no sense of any thing but what indulges their appetites; and can no longer suffer the more charming and accomplished part of the species to want a friend and advocate. I shall enquire, in due time, and make every antihero in Great-Britain give me an account why one woman is not as much as ought to fall to his share; and shall shew every abandoned wanderer, that with all his blustering, his restless following every semale he sees, is much more ridiculous, than my constant, imaginary attendance on my fair-one, without ever seeing her at all.

But the main purpose of this chapter I had like to have slipped over, to wit, the more exact account of my bower. As it is not natural for a man in love to sleep all night, but to be a great admirer of walking, I am at the charge of four tapers burning all night, and take my itinerations, with much gloomy satisfaction, from one end to the other of my long room, my field-bed being too small to interrupt my passage, though placed in the middle of my apartment. No one who has not been polite enough enoug can l but it minft truck a predream incom

Nº 2.

M were, had t round their castle as I a have to wi garde and diftai mufi my i wife fpon com I am ever

there

Nº 2.

quity, oused, , who lulges er the of the

I shall antiwhy fall to l waneltless more ttendg her

I had exact ral for be a charge ke my ction, room, ot my of my polite

nough

enough to have vifited Mr. Powell's theatre, can have a notion how I am accommodated; but if you will suppose a fingle man had Westminster-hall for his bed-chamber, and lay in a truckle-bed in the midst of it, it will give you a pretty good idea of the posture in which I dream (but with honour and chaftity) of the incomparable Mrs. PAGE.

My predecessors in knight-errantry, who were, as I above observed, men of the sword, had their lodgings adorned with burnished arms round the cornices, limbs of dried giants over their heads and all about the most of their caftle, where they walked by moon-light; but as I am a pen-champion and live in town, and have quite another fort of people to deal with, to wit, the criticks, beaus, and rakes of Coventgarden, I have nothing but stand-dishes, pens and ink, and paper, on little tables at equal distance, that no thought may be lost as I am mufing. I am forced to comply, more than my inclinations and high paffions would otherwife permit, and tell the world how to correfpond with me, after their own method, in the common way: I am to fignify, therefore, that I am more accessible than any other knights ever were before me, and in plain terms, that there is a coffee-house under my apartment;

C 4

nay

Nº 3

prete

meri

The

most

me in are they

VAG I kr othe

exan

mod

thing

thiev

to ta

vaili

THE

dern

pofit

which

As a

prot

a Lo

dom

his c

cent

good

nay further, that a letter directed, "To MAR." MADUKE MYRTLE at the Lover's Lodge to be "left at Shanley's coffee-house, Covent-gar." den," will find the gentlest of mortals, your most enamoured, humble servant.

N° 3. Tuesday, March 2, 1714.

"Young nobles, to my laws attention lend;

"And all you vulgar of my school, attend."

CONGREVE, Art of Love.

Lover's Lodge, March 2.

and place of abode, it is impossible for me to enjoy the studious retirement I promised myself in this place. For most of the people of wit and quality, who frequented these lodgings in Mr. Powell's time, have been here; and I having a filly creature of a footman who never lived but with private gentlemen, and cannot stedsastly lye, they all see by his countenance he does not speak truth when he denies me, and will break in upon me. It is an unspeakable pleasure that so many beauteous ladies have made me compliments upon my design to savour and defend the sex against all pre-

MARe to be it-garyour

of Love.

name ole for omifed people
lodghere;
in who in, and coundenies an unutcous on my inft all

pre-

pretenders without merit, and those who have merit, and use it only to deceive and betray. The principal fair-ones of the town, and the most eminent toasts, have figned an address of thanks to me, and in the body of it laid before me fome grievances, among which the greatest are the evil practices of a fett of persons whom they call in their presentation THE LOVERS VAGABOND. There has been indeed, ever fince I knew this town, one man of condition or other, who has been at the head, and, giving example to this fort of companions, been the model for the fashion. It would be a vain thing to pretend to property in a country where thieves were tolerated; and it is as much fo to talk of honour and decency when the prevailing humour runs directly against them. THE LOVERS VAGABOND are an order of modern adventurers, who feem to be the exact opposite to that venerable and chaste fraternity which were formerly called Knights-errant. As a knight-errant professed the practice and protection of all virtues, particularly chastity, a Lover VAGABOND tramples upon all rights domestic, civil, human, and divine, to come at his own gratification in the corruption of innocent women. There are fometimes persons of good accomplishments and faculties who commence mence fecretly Lovers VAGABOND; but though amorous stealths have been imputed by some historians to the wifest and greatest of mankind, yet none but fuperficial men have ever publicly entered into the lift of the vaga-A LOVER VAGABOND, confidering him in his utmost perfection and accomplishment, is but a feeming man. He usually has a command of infignificant words accompanied with eafy action, which paffes among the fillier part of the fair for eloquence and fine breeding. He has a mien of condescension, from the knowledge that his carriage is not abfurd, which he pursues to the utmost impudence. He can cover any behaviour, or cloath any idea with words that to an unskilful ear shall bear nothing of offence. He has all the sufficiency which little learning, and general notices of things, give to giddy heads, and is wholly exempt from that diffidence which almost always accompanies great fense and great virtue in the presence of those whom they admire. But the LOVER VAGABOND loving no woman fo much as to be diffressed for the lofs of her, his manner is generally eafy and jaunty, and it must be from very good sense and experience in life, that he does not appear amiable. It happens unfortunately for him, though much to the advantage of those whom I have Nº 3 I hav this Brita has he c fudd ogli gazi lady thin a ce will her, that not thin chie plag who circ fort on COIT to upo ftill

me

tha

and

Nº 3. ough fome manever vagahim nt, is comwith r part ding. knowch he can with thing which , give n that great those BOND d for y and e and ppear him, whom

have

I have taken under my care, that the chief of this order, at present, among us in Great-Britain, is but a speculative debauchée. He has the language, the air, the tender glance; he can hang upon a look, has most exactly the fudden veneration of face when he is catched ogling one whose pardon he would beg for gazing; he has the exultation at leading off a lady to her coach; can let drop an indifferent thing, or call her fervants with a loudness and a certain gay insolence well enough; nay, he will hold her hand too fast for a man that leads her, and is indifferent to her, and yet come to that gripe with such flow degrees, that she cannot fay he squeezed her hand; but for any thing thing further he has no inclination. This chieftain, however, I fear, will give me more plague and disturbance than any one man with whom I am to engage, or rather whom I am to circumvent. He is bufy in all places; an ample fortune and vigour of life enable him to carry on a shew of great devastation where-ever he comes. But I give him hereby fair warning to turn his thoughts to new entertainments, upon pain of having it discovered, that she is still a virgin upon whom he made his last settle-The fecret, that he is more innocent than he feems, is preferved by great charge and expence on humble retainers and fervants of

of his pleasures. But some of the women, who are above the age of novices, have found him out, and have in a private gang given him the nick-name of the BLITE, for that they find themselves blasted by him, though they are not fenfible of his touch. It was the other day faid at a vifit, " Mr. fuch a one," naming the BLITE, " had ruined a certain young " lady." " No," faid a fenfible female, " if she " fays fo, I am fure she wrongs him. He may," continued she, with an air of a disappointed woman, between rage and laughter, "hire " ruffians to abuse her; but many a woman " has come out of the BLITE's hands even " fafer than she wished. I know one to whom, " at parting, with a thousand poetical repeti-"tions, and preffing her hands, he vowed he " would tell nobody; but the flirt, throwing "out of his arms, answered pertly, I don't " make you the fame promise."

Though I shall from time to time display the LOVERS VAGABOND in their proper colours, I here publish an act of indemnity to all females who took them for fine fellows 'till my writings appeared, that is to fay (for in a public act we must be very clear), I shall not look back to any thing that happened before Thursday the 25th of February last past, that

publ 1 all v of L

Nº 3.

that

In with take TIA into mea plea plac of a deli exp all or > wh fior I c the der bei din

lib

ate

Nº 3.

omen,

found

given

t they

they

other

aming

young

if the may,"

ointed

hire

oman

even

hom,

epeti-

ed he wing

don't

fplay

ours,

I fe-

1 my

in a

not bepaft,

that

that being the first day of my appearance in publick.

I expect, therefore, to find, that on that day all vagrant defires took their leave of the cities of London and Westminster.

In order to recover fimplicity of manners without the loss of true gaiety of life, I shall take upon me the office of ARBITER ELEGAN-TIARUM. I cannot eafily put those two Latin into two as expressive English words; but my meaning is, to fet up for a judge of elegant pleasures, and I shall dare to affert, in the first place (to flew both the difcerning and feverity of a just judge), that the greatest elegance of delights confifts in the innocence of them; I expect, therefore, a feat to be kept for me at all balls, and a ticket fent, that by myfelf, or a subordinate officer of mine, I may know what is done and faid at all affemblies of diverfion. I shall take care to substitute none, where I cannot be myself present, who are not fit for the best-bred fociety; in the choice of fuch deputies. I shall have particular regard to their being accomplished in the little usages of ordinary and common life, as well as in noble and liberal arts.

I have many youths, who, in the intermediate seasons between the terms at the universities, are under my discipline, after being perfect masters of the Greek and Roman eloquence, to learn of me ordinary things, fuch as coming in, and going out of a room. Mr. Severn him. felf, whom I now make the pattern of good. breeding, and my top fine gentleman, was with me twice a day for fix months upon his first coming to town, before he could leave the room with any tolerable grace; when he had a mind to be going, he never could move without bringing in the words, "Well, Sir, I find "I interrupt you;" or, "Well, I fear you have "other bufiness;" or, "Well, I must be go-" ing;" hereupon I made him give me a certain fum of money down in hand, under the penalty of forfeiting twenty shillings every time upon going away he pronounced the particle well. I will not fay how much it cost him before he could get well out of the room. Some filly particle or other, as it were to tack the taking leave with the rest of the discourse, is a common error of young men of good education.

are

Though I have already declared I shall not use words of foreign termination, I cannot help it if my correspondents do it. A gentleman therefore who subscribes Aronces, and writes to me concerning some regulations to be made among

N° 3 amore partiplair of the toge hude course observations partiplairs partiplairs partiplairs partiplairs by the course observations are partiplairs.

faul Enc

fign

fion

the

" In " Sa

" V

" V

the I

Nº 3.

erfect

ce, to ng in,

him-

good.

with first

the had

with-

find

have

go-

cer-

r the time

rticle

him

oom.

urfe,

good

l not help

rites

nade

nong

among a fett of country dancers, must be more particular in his account. His general complaint is, that the men, who are at the expence of the ball, bring people of different characters together; and the libertine and innocent are huddled, to the danger of the latter, and encouragement of the former. I have frequently observed this kind of enormity, and must defire Aronces to give me an exact relation of the airs and glances of the whole company, and particularly how Mrs. GATTY fits, when it happens that she is to pass by the LOVER VAGA-BOND, who, I find, is got into that company by the favour of his coufin JENNY. For I defign to have a very strict eye upon these diverfions, and it shall not suffice, that, according to the author of "The Rape of the Lock," all faults are laid upon SYLPHS; when I make my Enquiry, as the same author has it,

"In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,

"The glance by day, and whifper in the dark?

[&]quot;What guards the purity of melting maids

[&]quot; Safe from the treacherous friend and daring spark, [&]quot;When kind occasion prompts their warm defires, [&]quot;When mufick foftens, and when dancing fires?"

^{} This day were advertized, 1. "The Persian Tales;"
2. "The Cid, or the Heroic Daughter;" 3. "Pope's Rape of the Lock;" 4. "The present Con tition and the Protestant Succession vindicated."

N° 4. Thursday, March 4, 1714.

tentine of the content of the second

The dancer joining with the tuneful throng, Adds decent motion to the sprightly song.
This step denotes the careful Lover, this The hardy Warrior, or the drunken Swiss.
His pliant limbs in various figures move,
And different gestures different passions prove.
Strange Art! that slows in silent eloquence, That to the pleas'd spectator can dispense Words without sound, and, without speaking, sense.

WEAVER'S * History of Dancing.

THE great work which I have begun for the service of the more polite part of this nation, cannot be supposed to be carried on by the invention and industry of a single person only: it is, therefore, necessary I invite all other ingenious persons to assist me. Considering my title is THE LOVER, and that a good air and mien is (in one who pretends to please the fair) as useful as skill in all or any of the arts and sciences, I am mightily pleased to observe, that the arank cated of k shall to writeps ence delig

" co!

ing a

" 25. " wif

" the " Stra

SIRI has from I kn

full * S No 88

ned

the

^{*} See TATLER, with notes, and SPECTATOR passim.

Nº 4

the art of dancing is, of late, come to take rank in the learned world, by being communicated in letters and characters, as all other parts of knowledge have for fome ages been. shall defire all those of the faculty of dancing, to write me, from time to time, all the new steps they take in the improvement of the science *. I this morning read, with unspeakable delight, in "The Evening Post," the following advertisement:

" On Tuesday last was published,

"The BRETAGNE, a French dance, by Mr. PE-"cour, and writ by Mr. SIRIS; engraven in cha-"racters and figures, for the use of masters, price "25. 6d. Note, Mr. SIRIS'S Ball Dances are like-"wife printed, and his original Art of Dancing by "Characters and Figures. All fold by J. Walsh at "the Harp and Hautboy in Catherine-street in the " Strand."

Take this dance in its full extent and variety, it is the best I ever read; and though Mr. Siris, out of modesty, may pretend that he has only translated it, I cannot but believe, from the style, that he himself writ it; and if I know any thing of writing, he certainly penned the last coupée. This admirable piece is full of instruction: you see it is called the BRE-

ve.

ing,

neing.

n for f this on by erfon other g my r and e fair) s and , that

im. the

^{*} See TATLER with Notes, Edit. 1786, in 6 Vols. Vol. III. Nº 88, p 147, and note.

Nº A

te in

46 W

" qu

ce th

* C3

ic if ic a ce th

te ca

ec In

es th

" of

Gre

reaf

" ta

this is ap

will

writ

by t

CHI

intit

"I

of F

the

of Da

the L

TAGNE, that is to fay, the BRITAIN. It is intended for a festival entertainment (like Mr. BAYES's grand dance), that, upon occasion of the peace with France and Spain, the whole nation should learn a new dance together. Some of the best-experienced persons in French dancing are to practife it at the great room in York. buildings, where, it feems, the Master of the Revels lives. He, as it is usual, carries a white wand in his hand, and at a motion made with it to the musick, the dance is to begin. I am credibly informed, that out of respect, and for distinction-sake, he has ordered, that the first Person who shall be taken out is to be the Cenfor of Great-Britain. I do not think this at all unlikely, nor below the gravity of that Sage; for, it is well rnown, the Judges of the land dance the first day of every term; and, it is supposed by some, they are to dance next after the Cenfor.

Mr. Siris has made the beginning of this movement very difficult for any one who has not, from his natural parts, a more than ordinary qualification that way. The dance is written in the genius required by Mr. Weaver in his "History of Dancing*." "The Ancients," says that more than peripatetic philosopher, Mr. Weaver, "were so fond of danc-

^{*} See SPECT. Edit. 1788, with Notes; paffim.

[&]quot; ing,

is ine Mr.
of the nation ne of ncing Yorkf the white ith it
I am

Nº 4.

d for e first Cenat all Sage; land it is after this has n orice is AVER Anichie

ing,

danc.

ing, that PLINY has given us dancing islands, which passage of PLINY, Calius Rodiginus quotes. There is also an account," says he, that in the Torthebian Lake, which is also called the Nymphæan, there are certain islands of the Nymphs, which move round in a ring at the sound of the flutes, and are therefore called the Calamine Islands, from calamus, a pipe or reed; and also the Dancing Islands, because at the sound of the symphony they were moved by the beating of the feet " of the fingers.

I appeal to all the learned etymologists in Great Britain, whether it is possible to assign a reason for calling this grand dance "The Bri-"tain," if the French did not think to make this a dancing island. The style of Mr. Siris is apparently political, as any judicious reader will find, if he peruses his Siciliana *, which was writ to instruct another dancing island, taught by the French. Let any man who has read Machiavel, and understands dancing characters, cast an eye on Mr. Siris's second page. It is intituled, "The Siciliana, Mr. Siris's new "Dance for the year 1714." Mr. Siris, a native of France, you may be sure, sees surther into the French motions for the ensuing year than we heavy Englishmen do, or he would never say it was made for that more than any other year, for all authors believe their works will last every year after they are written, to the world's end. I take it for a sly satire upon the awkward imitation of all nations which have not yet learned French dances, that the very next page to the Siciliana is called "The Baboon's Minuet" Then after that again, to intimidate the people who won't learn from the French, he calls the next "The Dragoon's Minuet." I wish all good Protestants to be aware of this movement, for they tell me that when it is teaching, a Jesuit, in disguise, plays on the kit.

^{*} The "SICILIANA," and "An Essay towards an History of Dancing," were both advertised at the end of this number of the Lover.

36

But I forget that this is too elaborate for my character. All that I have to fay to the matter of Dancing is only as it regards Lovers; and as I would advise them to avoid dabbling in politicks, I have explained these political Dances, that the motions we learn may never end in warlike ones, like those which were performed by the antients with clashing of swords, described by Mr. Weaver (in the above-mentioned History) out of Claudian:

"Here too the warlike dancers blefs our fight,

" The

N° 4

" A

" St

No

" C

" T

centuand and a fente to be neigh paffic Hone that

erran

my 1

[&]quot;Their artful wandering, and their laws of flight, [&]quot; An unconfus'd return, and inoffenfive fight.

[&]quot; Soon as the master's blow proclaims the prize, [&]quot;Their moving breasts in tuneful changes rife,

N° 4.
never other s will
the

upon have very The n, to n the goon's to be that plays or my natter and as poliances, bove-

ormed

ight, ize,

 . The shields salute their fides, or strait are shown " In air with waving ; deep the targets groan,

Struck with alternate swords, which thence re-

" And end the concert, and the facred found."

Nº 5. Saturday March 6, 1714.

"--- My foul's far better part, for the same of

in a cultivent habit

" Ceafe weeping, nor afflict thy tender heart :

" For what thy father to thy mother was,

"That faith to thee, that folemn vow I pass !"

CONGREVE, Art of Love.

As I have fixed my stand in the very centre of Covent garden, a place for this last century particularly famed for Wit and Love, and am near the play-house, where one is represented every night by the other, I think I ought to be particularly careful of what passes in my neighbourhood; and, as I am a professed knighterrant, do all that lies in my power to make the charming endowment of Wit, and the prevailing passion of Love, subservient to the interests of Honour and Virtue. You are to understand, that having yesterday made an excursion from my lodge, there passed by me near St. James's the charmer of my heart. I have, ever since hei

D 3

Nº 5.

man

as are imme

vices

I ha

truth

neigh

heroe

them

the c fame

take confi

must

admi

great

a loo

never

bofor

fo gr called its lo

hero

than

dram

this.

W

her parents first bestowed her, avoided all places by her frequented; but accident once or twice in a year brings the bright phantom into my fight, upon which there is a flutter in my bosom for many days following. When I con. fider that during this emotion I am highly exalted in my being, and my every fentiment improved by the effects of that paffion; when I reflect that all the objects which present themfelves to me, now are viewed in a different light from that in which they had appeared, had I not lately been exhilarated by her presence; in fine, when I find in myfelf fo ftrong an inclination to oblige and entertain all whom I meet with, accompanied with fuch a readiness to receive kind impressions of those I converse with; I am more and more convinced, that this paffion is in honest minds the strongest incentive that can move the foul of man to laudable accomplishments. Is a man just? let him fall in love and grow generous. Is a man good-natured? let him love and grow public-spirited. It immedaitely makes the good which is in him shine forth in new excellencies; and the ill vanish away without the pain of contrition, but with a sudden amendment of heart. This fort of pasfion, to produce such effects, must necessarily be conceived towards a modest and virtuous woman;

Nº 5. laces e or n into in my cony exit imhen I themlight had I e; in clinameet to rewith; affion e that ccomn love ured? It imfhine vanish with a f pafily be

s wo-

man;

man; for the arts to obtain her must be such as are agreeable to her, and the Lover becomes immediately possessed with such perfections or vices, as make way to the object of his defires. I have plenty of examples to enforce thefe truths, every night that a play is acted in my neighbourhood; the noble resolutions which heroes in tragedy take, in order to recommend themselves to their mistresses, are no way below the confideration of the wifest men, yet, at the fame time, instructions the most probable to take place in the minds of the young and inconfiderate: but, in our degenerate age, the poet must have more than ordinary skill to raise the admiration of the audience fo high in the more great and public parts of his drama, to make a loose people attend to a passion which they never, or that very faintly, felt in their own bosoms. That perfect piece, which has done fo great honour to our nation and language, called CATO, excels as much in the passion of its lovers, as in the sublime sentiments of its hero; their generous love, which is more heroic than any concern in the chief characters of most dramas, makes but subordinate characters in this.

When MARCIA reproves Juba for entertaining her with Love in such a conjuncture of D 4 affairs.

affairs, wherein the common cause should take place of all other thoughts, the prince answers in this noble manner:

Thou virtuous maid; I'll hasten to my troops, And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue.
If e'er I lead them to the field, when all The war shall stand rang'd in its just array,
And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee!
O lovely maid, then will I think on thee!
And, in the shock of charging hosts, remember What glorious deeds should grace the man, who hopes For Marcia's love.

It has been observable, that the stage in all times has had the utmost influence on the manners and affections of mankind; and as those representations of human life have tended to promote virtue or vice, so has the age been improved or debauched. I doubt not but the frequent reflections upon marriage and innocent love, with which our theatre has long abounded, have been the great cause of our corrupt sentiments in this respect. It is not every youth that can behold the fine gentleman of the comedy represented with a good grace, leading a loose and profligate life, and condemning virtuous affection as infipid, and not be fecretly emulous of what appears so amiable to a whole audience. These gay pictures strike strong and lasting impressions on the fancy and imagination of years innoc vanta matter can rordin of ap and ediffer which that waffects

Bu exult view with as th tions to ince by leand in they in the both

to ou

N° 5 d take nswers

$,

e!

er o hopes

in all on the nd as cended been ut the nocent anded, fentiyouth of the eading og virecretly whole og and nation of of youth, and are hardly to be erased in riper years, unless a commerce between virtuous and innocent lovers be painted with the same advantage, and with as lovely colours, by the most masterly hands on the theatre. I have said masterly hands, because they must be such who can run counter to our natural propensity to inordinate pleasure; little authors are very glad of applause purchased any way; loose appetites and desires are easily raised, but there is a wide difference between that reputation and applause which is obtained from our wantonness, and that which slows from a capacity of stirring such affections which, upon cool thoughts, contribute to our happiness.

But I was going to give an account of the exultation which I am in upon an accidental view of the woman whom I had long loved, with a most pure, though ardent passion; but as this is, according to my former representations of the matter, no way expedient for her to indulge me in, I must break the force of it by leading a life suitable and analogous to it, and making all the town sensible, how much they owe to her bright eyes which inspire me in the performance of my present office, in which I shall particularly take all the youth of both sexes under my care.

The

Nº 5.

as far

had lo

house for th

vifage

portu

have

have the g miles

put n

plays

ter, 1

the E

Nº

On

Cre

Th

Ead

pleaf

The two theatres, and all the polite coffee. houses, I shall constantly frequent, but principally the coffee-house under my lodge, But. TON's , and the play-house in Covent-garden: but, as I fet up for the judge of pleasures, I think it necessary to affign particular places of resort to my young gentlemen as they come to town, who cannot expect to pop in at Mr. BUTTON's on the first day of their arrival in town. I recommend it, therefore, to young men to frequent Shanley's + fome days before they take upon them to appear at Button's; I have ordered, that no one look in the face of any new-comer, and taken effectual methods that he may possess himself of any empty chair in the house without being stared at : but forasmuch as some, who may have been in town for fome months together heretofore, by long absence have relapsed from the audacity they had arrived at, into their first bashfulness and rusticity, I have given them the same privilege of obscure entry for ten days. I have directed also, that books be kept of all that passes in town in all the eminent coffee-houses, that any gentleman, though just arrived out of exile from the most distant counties in Great-Britain, may ^{} See Dr. Johnson's "Lives of English Poets," Vol. II. p. 399. Edit. 8vo 1781.

[†] A Coffee-house in Covent-garden. See p. 24. It is mentioned in Tom Browne's Works as a house of diversion for young gentlemen.

princi. arden: I think refort town, TTON'S

No s

coffee.

I reto frey take ve orof any ds that nair in ut fortown y they efs and ivilege irected ses in at any e from , may y long

entioned or young

ol. II. p.

as familiarly enter into the town-talk, as if he had lodged all that time in Covent-garden; but, Bur. above all things, I have provided, that proper houses for bathing and cupping may be ready for those country gentlemen, whose too healthy visages give them an air too robust and importunate for this polite region of Lovers, who have fo long avoided wind and weather, and have every day been out stripped by them inthe ground they have paffed over by feveral miles. As to the orders under which I have put my female youth at affemblies, operas, and plays, I shall declare them in a particular chapter, under the title of, "The Government of the Eye in Publick Places."

Tuesday, March 9, 1714.

On rows of homely turf they fat to fee, Crown'd with the wreaths of every common tree. There, while they fit in ruftic majefty, Each lover has his miftress in his eye.

CONGREVE, Art of Love.

YORRESPONDENTS begin to grow numerous; and indeed I cannot but be pleafed with the intelligence which one of them

· huf

the'

has.

· riag can can

· For

' tall

' ing

the the

to ' oth

co)

' ing

· bel

Re

reg fta rol

fre

· L

'th

· bu ca ca

· m qu

· ve

th th

W

them fends me, for the novelty of it. The gentleman is a very great antiquary, and tells me he has feveral pieces by him, which are letters from the Sabine virgins to their parents, friends, and lovers in their own country, after the famous rape which laid the foundation of the Roman people. He thinks these very proper memorials for one who writes an history under the title of Lover. He has also answers. to those letters, and pretends Ovid took the defign of his epiffles from having had these very papers in his hands. This, you'll fay, is a very great curiofity; and for that reason I have refolved to give the reader the following account, which was written by a Sabine lady to her mother, within ten days after that memorable mad wedding, and is as follows:

Dear Mother,

'THIS is to acquaint you, that I am better pleased with a very good-natured husband in this little village here of Rome, than ever I was in all the state and plenty at ' your house. When he first seized me, I must confess, he was very rough and ungentle; but he grows much tamer every day than other, and I do not question but we shall soon be as orderly and fober a couple as you and my father. My cousin Lydia nobody knows of · certainly,

Nº 6. The nd tells ich are arents, , after tion of y prohistory infwersthe defe verv a very ve recount. er moe mad

m betl huf, than nty at l must
; but
other,
be as ed my ws of tainly,

certainly, but the poor girl had two or three ' husbands in the route, and as she is very pretty. they fay all contend for her still. has appointed a day to fix the disputed marriages; but it is very remarkable, that feveral can neither agree to live together, or to part. For if one proposes it, that is taken so mor-'tally ill, that the other will infift upon staying, at least till the other consents to stay; and then the party who denied demands a divorce, to be revenged of the same inclination in the other. Thus they fay, they cannot confent to cohabit till they are upon an equality in hav-'ing each refused the other. This, you must believe, will make a great perplexity; but 'Romulus, who expects a war, will have great regard to let none who do not like each other ' flay together, and makes it a maxim, that a robust race is not to be expected to descend from wranglers. Pray let me know how my 'Lover, who proposed himself to you, bears the loss of me. I must confess, I could not but refent his being indifferent on this occasion, after all the vows and protestations he made when you left us together. I don't question but he will make jests upon the po-'verty of the Romans; but they threaten here, that if you are not very well contented with what has paffed, they will make you a visit with fwords in their hands, and demand por-tions with your daughters. When I was made prize by my good man, who is remarkably valiant (for which reason they left me undif. puted in his hands), he foon took off my first terrors from my observation of that his preeminence, and a certain determinate behaviour, with a dying fondness that glowed in his eyes. I told him, from what I faw other e people fuffer, I could not but think my lot very fortunate, that I had fallen into his hands: and begged of him he would indulge my curiofity in going with me to fome eminence, and observe what befell the rest of my friends and countrywomen. He did fo, and from the place we stood on, I observed what passed in e all the hurlyburly, he observing to me the quality and merit of the husbands, I giving to him an account of the wives. How strangely truth will out! HISPULLA, as I faw, when they were struggling for her, has crooked legs; · CHLOE laughed fo violently when she was carried off, that I observed her lover, as pretty as fhe is, hardly thought it a purchase; while DICTYNNA, as homely as she is, by muffling her face and shrieking, was contended for by twenty rivals. That arch creature FLORA has efcaped by offering herfelf: as foon as the perceived what was intended, she got upon a · little

Nº 6.

me,

thin now

as a her

for

who NA

·lon

in for

fuc

'you

and

flow the

cit

this vili

LES me

' fee

, CIN

Nº 6. d pormade rkably undif. y first is preehaviin his other ny lot ands; e my ience, riends m the ed in e the ng to ngely they legs; s carretty while ffling or by A has s fhe

little

CINNATUS!

· little hillock, and cried out, "Who will have me, who will have me? here i am : come take me." This forwardness made every man think her a common woman; and the flirt is now fafe under the protection of Romulus. as a woman not yet disposed of : but when her character and innocence is known, it is thought she will fall to the lot of MARCIUS, for his generous behaviour to THALESTRINA, who, you know, was betrothed to CINCIN-'NATUS; MARCIUS and CINCINNATUS have long been mortal enemies, and met each other in skirmishes of our different nations, wherein fometimes one, fometimes the other, has been This noble virgin, whose beauty ' fuccessful. and virtue distinguished her above all the Sabine 'youth, fell into the hands of MARCIUS. Our 'apartments here are not very lofty, and arbors 'and grottos, strewed with rushes, herbage and flowers, make up the best bridal beds among the Romans; to fuch an abode as this MARcius dragged the lovely THALESTRINA. This people are not polite enough, especially on this occasion, to express their passion by civility and ceremonious behaviour: when THA-LESTRINA was convinced of MARCIUS's immediate purpose, she fell into a swoon at his ' feet, and with a figh in her fall cried, Oh Cin-

MARCIUS

Nº 6:

ee wol

" not

" con

" ene

" to

" gra

" wil

" of

" wh

" the

"Ik

" me

" my

· knc

of f pre

ver

fro

col

not

f ter

" us

s the

for

he he

fu

' MARCIUS, at the suddenness of the accident, and the name of his enemy and rival for military glory, was furprized with many different passions and refentments, which all ought to have given way to the care of THALESTRINA; but in a nation of men only, and on the first day wherein they had a woman in their com' monwealth, he was much at a loss how to be affistant to her; but as he saw life revive in her, nature and good fense dictated rather to absent himself, than be present at the many differtions of her person in coming to herself.

' He retired, but entered the place again when he thought the might be enough recovered to be capable of receiving what he had to fay to her.

· He approached as fhe leaned against a tree which supported the bower, and delivered himfelf in thefe terms: "Madam, the paffion you were lately in, your noble form, and the person you called "upon in your distress, give me to understand

"you are THALBSTRINA. I am MARCIUS, and

"have no debate with CINCINNATUS, but on " account of glory; were he a stranger to me,

" your passion for him should secure you; were

"he my friend, you should command all in "my power, in spite of all the charms I see in

" you: and as he is my enemy, I fcorn to Missire

" wound

N° 6. cident, milifferent ght to RINA; he first

RINA; ne first comto be ive in her to many erself. when tree vered

vered

ad to

y in, called fland , and it on me, were ll in ce in n to

ound

"wound him in a circumstance wherein he is not capable of making a defence. You have common humanity, and the generosity of an enemy for your safeguard; I will return you to Cincinnatus; and I see, by the beautiful gratitude which I now read in your sace, you will represent this conduct to the advantage of the Romans, of whom there is not one who does not sacrifice his private passions to the service of his country. I assure you, I have say I know not whether it is more beholden to me this day for the offering which I make of my anger, or my love."

'He did not put her to the pain of long acknowledgments of so great a bounty as that of her very self, but conducted her into the presence of Romulus, and told him, with a very joyous air, he had resigned a fine woman from his bed, to purchase a brave man to his country.

'I know CINCINNATUS fo well, that I doubt not but he will be a friend to Rome, and interpose his good offices for a peace between us and the Sabines: I hope all will join in the same mediation, who have children here; for I already know not to which party my heart would wish success, if a war should ensure for I find a wife is no longer a daughter, or any other name, which comes in competition

'tion with that relation: but hope things will

' fo end that I may have the pleasure to be the faithful consort of an honest man, without interfering with any other character, especially

'that of, 'Madam,

' Your dutiful child,

MIRAMANTIS.

 This day is published, "Love in a Wood; or, the "Country 'Squire, by G. J."

Nº 7. Thursday, March 11, 1714.

-- habet & sua castra Cupido.

Ovid.

The Battle of EYES.

IT has been always my opinion, that a man in love should address himself to his mistress with passion and sincerity; and that, if this method fails, it is in vain for him to have recourse to artifice or dissimulation, in which he will always find himself worsted, unless he be a much better proficient in the art than any man I have yet been acquainted with.

The following letter is a very natural exemplification of what I have here advanced.

I have

'I

I have

brough

fame

Mrs. A

by I

' muc

her the first

' me

hav

the

row live

ove

hac

firf

inf

6 be gs will

NTIS.

or, the

OVID.

a man s mifif this ve rech he he be n any al exinced. have

I have called it "The Battle of Eyes," as it be the brought to my mind several combats of the out in fame nature, which I have formerly had with ecially Mrs. Ann Page.

· Sweet Mr. MYRTLE,

"I HAVE for some time been forely smitten by Mrs. Lucy, who is a maiden lady in the twenty-eighth year of her age. She has fo 'much of the coquette in her, that it supplies ' the place of youth, and still keeps up the girl in 'her aspect and behaviour. She has found out 'the art of making me believe that I have the 'first place in her affection; and yet so puzzles 'me by a double tongue, and an ambiguous 'look, that about once a fortnight I fancy I ' have quite loft her. I was the other night at 'the Opera, where seeing a place in the second 'row of the Queen's box kept by Mrs. Lucy's 'livery, I placed myself in the pit directly 'over against her footman, being determined to 'ogle her most passionately all that evening. I 'had not taken my stand there above a quarter of an hour, when Enter Mrs. Lucy. At her 'first coming in I expected she would have 'cast her eye upon her humble servant; but, 'instead of that, after having dropped curtile 'after curtie to her friends in the boxes, she began to deal her falutes about the pit in the E 2

' she slid her eye over me, curtified to the right

V9 7. Nº 7. ' fame liberal manner. Although I stood in an o the full point of view, and, as I thought, was made a better figure than any body about me. long feve treat I lo

repa rifin eyes the

an c con

Thi ·Ib · Wh

· Mrs · lady ove:

· I to give

· I w · bro

· pla · leaf bei

em! for

f old

an an

and to the left, and would not fee me for the space of three minutes. I fretted inwardly to find myself thus openly affronted on every fide, and was refolved to let her know my refentments by the first opportunity. 'This happened foon after; for Mrs. Lucy looking upon me, as though she had but just discovered me, she began to fink in the first offer to a curtile; upon which, instead of making her any return, I cocked my nofe, and · stared at the upper gallery; and immediately ' after raifing myself on tiptoe, stretched out ' my neck, and bowed to a lady who fat just behind her. I found, by my coquette's behaviour, that she was not a little nettled at this my civility, which passed over her head. 'She looked as pale as ashes, fell a talking with one that fat next her, and broke out ' into feveral forced smiles and fits of laughter, which I dare fay there was no manner of occafion for. Being refolved to push my success, I cast my eye through the whole circle of beauties, and made my bow to every one that 'I knew, and to feveral whom I never faw before in my life. Things were thus come to ot '

Nº 7. od in ought, at me. right ne for ed inronted et her unity. Lucy ut just e first ad of e, and diately ed out at just 's beled at head. alking ce out ghter, occaiccess, cle of e that

me to an open rupture, when, the curtain rifing, I was forced to face about. I had not fat down long, but my heart relented, and gave me feveral girds and twitches for the barbarous treatment which I had shewn to Mrs. Lucy. I longed to fee the act ended, and to make reparation for what I had done. At the first rifing of the audience between the acts, our eyes met; but as mine began to offer a parley, the hard-hearted flut conveyed herself behind an old lady in fuch a manner, that she was concealed from me for several moments. This gave me new matter of indignation; and I began to fancy I had loft her for ever. While I was in this perplexity of thought, Mrs. Lucy lifted herfelf up from behind the lady who shadowed her, and peeped at me over her right shoulder: nay, madam, thinks I to myself, if those are your tricks, I will 'give you as good as you bring; upon which 'I withdrew, in a great passion, behind a tall broad-shouldered fellow, who was very luckily 'placed before me. I here lay incog. for at ' least three seconds; fing was the word; but, being very uneasy in that situation, I again 'emerged into open candle-light, when looking for Mrs. Lucy, I could fee nothing but the 'old woman, who screened her for the remaining part of the interlude. I was then forced to fit down to the second act, being very fnea " much agitated and tormented in mind. I was spea terribly afraid that she had discovered my un. upo easiness, as well knowing, that, if she caught me at fuch an advantage, she would use me ame ' like a dog. For this reason I was resolved to ' I bu play the indifferent upon her at my next stand. box ing-up. The second act, therefore, was no utter sooner finished, but I sastened my eye upon telli ' a young woman who fat at the further end of ' with the boxes, whispering at the same time, to one have who was near me, with an air of pleasure and I had admiration. I gazed upon her a long time, no when stealing a glance at Mrs. Lucy, with faid a defign to see how she took it, I found her ush face was turned another way, and that the cou was examining, from head to foot, a young well-dreffed rascal who stood behind her. 'This cut me to the quick, and notwithstanding I toffed back my wig, rapped my fnuff- " pa box, displayed my handkerchief, and at last cracked a jest with an orange wench to attract her eye, the perfifted in her confounded ogle, till Mrs. Robinson came upon the stage to ' my relief. I now fat down sufficiently mortified, and determined, at the end of the opera, to make my submission in the most humble manner. Accordingly, rifing up, I put on a fneaking

E 3

' mo "

" mo

" act " the

" tir

66

d ogle,

morti-

e opera,

humble

ut on a neaking

ng very fneaking penitential look, but, to my un-I was speakable confusion, found her back turned my un. upon me. Tod ile 12 ele caught 'I had now nothing left for it but to make use mends for all by handing her to her chair. olved to 'I bustled through the crowd, and got to her t fland. box-door as foon as possible, when, to my was no utter confusion, the young puppy, I have been to upon telling you of before, bolted out upon me end of with Mrs. Lucy in his hand. I could not , to one have started back with greater precipitation if fure and I had met a ghost. The malicious gipsy took og time, 'no notice of me, but turning afide her head, 'faid fomething to her dog of a gentleman-and her 'usher, with a smile that went to my heart. I hat the 'could not sleep all night for it, and the next young 'morning writ the following letter to her:

"MADAM,

nd her. thstand "I PROTEST I meant nothing by what y snuff "passed last night, and beg you will put the at last " most candid interpretation upon my looks and attract "actions; for, however my eyes may wander, " there is none but Mrs. Lucy who has the entage to "tire possession of my heart.

" I am, Madam,

"With a passion that is not to be expressed " either by looks, words or actions, " Your most unalienable,

" and most humble fervant. " Tom. WHIFFLE."

E 4

'And now, Sir, what do you think was her answer? why, to give you a true notion of her, and that you may guess at all her cursed tricks by this one—here it is:

" Mr. WHIFFLE,

"I AM very much surprised to hear you talk of any thing that passed between us last " night, when, to the best of my remembrance,

" I have not feen you these three days.

" Your fervant,

L. T."

 Books printed with an Elzevir letter, in neat pocket volumes, for Jacob Tonson in the Strand. Tamerlane and Fair Penitent, tragedies, by N. Rowe, Esq; The tragedy of Cato Campaign and Rosamond, by Mr. Addison. The Distress Mother, a tragedy, by Mr. Philips. The Careless Husband, a comedy, by Mr. Cibber. The Victim, a tragedy, by Mr. Johnson. A Collection of Poetical Miscellanies, by the best hands and published by Mr. Steele, N. B. The Ambitious Step Mother, Ulysses and Royal Convert, tragedies, written by N. Rowe Esq. will in a few days be published in the same volume.

Just published, An Essay towards an History of Dancing, in which the whole art and its various excellencies are in some measure explained; containing the several sorts of Dancing Antique and Modern, Serious, Scenical, Grotesque, &c. with the use of it as an exercise, qualification, diversion, &c. Printed for Jacob Tonson at Shakespear's-head, over against Catherine Areet in the Strand.

Just published, printed on a neat Elzevir letter, in a pockt volume, the second edition of "Letters of Abelard and Heloise." To which is prefixed, a particular account of their lives, amours and misfortunes, extracted chiefly from Monsieur Bayle. Translated from the French. Printed for J. W. and fold by W. Lewis in Russel-street, Covent-garden.

Saturday

Linqu

IN li ough objec take refift your appre take with own and a help admi look loofe and on o hone

and be a

the

was her of her, d tricks ear you

us laft

brance,

L. T."

eat pocke

e and Fair y of Cato freft Mo.

usband, Mr. John

eft hands

Step Mo-N. Rowe

ancing, i

e in fome Dancing

&c. with

ne.

Nº 8. Saturday, March 13, 1714.

Linquenda tellus & domus & placens uxor. Hor.

to de series in the series and the

IN the calculation of a man's happiness in life, there is no one circumstance which ought more carefully to be confidered, than the object of one's love. As that will certainly take full possession of the heart, except it be refisted in time, it is the utmost madness to let your affections fix where you cannot expect the approbation of your reason. If a man does not take this precaution, his days will pass away with frivolous pleasures and solid vexations; his own reflections only must soften his misfortunes and afflictions; but he can have no recourse, no help from his cooler thoughts, who dare not admit his reason into his council. We cannot look back upon the pleasures which flow from loofe defire, but with remorfe and contrition, and therefore the mind cannot recur to them on occasions of distress, to borrow comfort; but honourable Love, though it has all the foftness and tenderness which imagination can form, can be admitted under the feverest affliction, and is the best instrument to break its force; but as

. Printed Catherine a pocke

Heloife. , amours . Trans d by W.

turday

it breaks the force of forrow, it does not do it by wholly removing the affliction, but rather by diverfifying it. He that is under any great calamity, loses the sense of it, as it touches him. felf; and his affliction, which, perhaps, would have had in it the terrors of fear and shame, is, by the neglect of his own part in the affair, turned only into pity and compassion for a tender wife who participates it. This kind of concern carries an antidote to its poison, and the merit of her regard to him has something in it fo pleafing, that the foul feels a fecret confolation in the happiness of being possessed of such a companion, at the same time that he thinks her participation is the greatest article of his diffress. In all ages men who have differed from the fentiments of the world, when they have been precipitated by fury and party, and been facrificed to the rage of their enemies, have in trials of this fort funk under their diftreffes, or behaved themselves decently in them, according to the support which they have met with from the domestic partners of their affliction. This is an opportunity to vent the fecret pangs of the heart to one whose love makes nothing ungrateful, or, to utter the fense of injuries, where that appears conscious virtue, which

Nº 8. which pride or TI recite whic rous thing love, lette cum of it man fuffe pene bell RUD barl app of h his his

M

adn

f n

N° 8.

Ot do it ther by

y great es himwould fhame, e affair, a ten-of con-

and the

onfolaof fuch thinks of his liffered en they y, and emies, them, re met their nt the eir dif-

e fense virtue, which which to any other audience would found like pride and arrogance.

There are indeed very tender things to be recited from the writings of poetical authors, which express the utmost tenderness in an amorous commerce; but indeed I never read any thing which, to me, had fo much nature and love, as an expression or two in the following letter; but the reader must be let into the circumstance of the matter, to have a right sense of it. The epiftle was written by a gentlewoman to her husband, who was condemned to fuffer death. The unfortunate catastrophe happened at Exeter in the time of the late rebellion. A gentleman, whose name was PEN-RUDDOCK, to whom the letter was written, was barbarously sentenced to die without the least appearance of justice. He afferted the illegality of his enemies proceedings, with a spirit worthy his innocence; and the night before his death his lady writ to him the letter which I so much admire, and is as follows:

Mrs. PENRUDDOCK's last letter to her husband.

- " My dear heart,
- 'MY fad parting was so far from making me forget you, that I scarce thought upon myself fince, but wholly upon you. Those dear

60

6 love

· Yo

the

fo af

· wh dern

may

pref

imit

fron

V

6 ce ce e ne ar

· W

· yo

· W · C

M

I

· dear embraces which I yet feel, and shall never · lose, being the faithful testimonies of an indulgent husband, have charmed my foul to

' fuch a reverence of your remembrance, that, were it possible, I would, with my own blood, cement your dead limbs to life again; and

' (with reverence) think it no fin to rob heaven a little while longer of a martyr. Oh my dear! you must now pardon my passion, this being my last (oh fatal word) that ever you will receive from me; and know, that until the last minute that I can imagine you shall · live, I will facrifice the prayers of a Christian, and the groans of an afflicted wife. And when ' you are not (which fure by fympathy I shall 'know) I shall wish my own dissolution with 'you, that so we may go hand in hand to hea'ven. It is too late to tell you what I have, or rather have not done for you; how turned out of doors because I came to beg mercy; the Lord lay not your blood to their charge! I would fain discourse longer with you, but dare onot; passion begins to drown my reason, and will rob me of my devoire, which is all I have left to serve you. Adieu, therefore, ten thousand times, my dearest dear; and fince I must never see you more, take this prayer:

may your faith be so strengthened, that your constancy may continue! and then, I know · heaven

N° 8.
never an inoul to
that,

plood, and eaven h my , this

you

until fhall stian, when shall with head out; the dare and have ten

yer: your know aven heaven will receive you; whither grief and love will in a short time (I hope) translate,

' My dear,

'Your sad, but constant wife even to love your ashes when dead,
'ARUNDEL PENRUDDOCK.'

'May the 3d, 1655, 11 o'clock at night.
'Your children beg your bleffing, and present their duties to you.'

I do not know that I have ever read any thing fo affectionate as that line, 'those dear embraces 'which I yet feel.'

Mr. Penruddock's answer has an equal tenderness, which I shall recite also, that the town may dispute whether the man or the woman expressed themselves the more kindly, and strive to imitate them in less circumstances of distress; for from all, no couple upon earth are exempt.

Mr. PENRUDDOCK's last letter to his lady.

" Dearest best of creatures,

'I HAD taken leave of the world when I received yours: it did at once recall my fondness for life, and enable me to resign it. As I am sure I shall leave none behind me like you, which weakens my resolution to part from you, so when I reslect I am going to a place where there are none but such as you, I recover my courage. But sondness breaks in upon

upon me; and as I would not have my tears flow to-morrow, when your husband, and the father of our dear babes, is a public fpectacle; do not think meanly of me, that I give way to grief now in private, when I fee my fand run so fast, and I within few hours am to leave you helpless, and exposed to the merciles and insolent, that have wrongfully oput me to a shameless death, and will object that shame to my poor children. I thank you for all your goodness to me, and will endeavour so to die, as to do nothing unworthy that virtue in which we have mutually supported each other, and for which I defire you not to repine that I am first to be rewarded: fince you ever preferred me to yourself in all other ever preferred me to yourself in all other things; afford me, with chearfulness, the precedence in this.

'I defire your prayers in the article of death,
'for my own will then be offered for you and
'yours.

J. Penruddock *.'

* Col. John Penruddock was the third of three fons of Sir John Penruddock of Compton-Chamberlain in Wiltschire, who lost their lives in the service of the Crown. He appeared in arms with several of his friends for his exiled Sovereign, at Salisbury, and afterwards proclaimed him at Blandsord, but was soon overpowered, and taken by Col. Unton Croke, who promised him quarter; but, in violation of this promise, he was beheaded May 16, 1655. This active worthy Loyalist, died in a manner becoming a soldier and a Christian. Mrs. Penruddock's letter has several strokes in it, of the most navral, the most animated, and pathetic tenderness.

Tuesday

N°

follow with each us." my co and p wor imp

Cupi

eafi

wit!

Nº 8, tears and ublic hat I

I fee hours o the fully bject k you ndeay that orted not to e you

other

e preleath,

u and CK *.'

fons of n Wilt-He ap-Soverindford, CROKE, nise, he Loyalift,

. Mrs. most na-

efday

Tuesday, March 16, 1714.

Quanta laboras in Charybdi!

Hor.

TTPON my opening the Lover's box this morning, I found nothing in it but the following letter, made up very nicely, and fealed with a little Cupid holding a flaming heart in each hand, and circumscribed, "Love unites us." I find, by the contents of this letter, that my correspondent will soon change his device, and perhaps make the figure of Hymen perform that part which, at present, he has affigned to Cupid.

SIR.

'AS you are a man of experience in the 'world, I beg your advice in a matter of great 'importance to me. I have, for some time, been engaged in close friendship with a fine woman. Your knowledge of mankind will 'eafily inform you of the purport of that 'phrase. In short, I have lived with her, as ' with a she-friend, in the utmost propriety of that fterin; term; but, at prefent, I am under a very great embarass; for having run out most of my for. tune, in the course of my conversation with her,

I find myself necessitated to go into a new way of life, and by that means to make myfelf whole again. A favourable opportunity prefents itself: a rich widow (the common refuge of us idle fellows) has spoke kindly of " me, and I have reason to believe will very fhortly put me in possession of her person and

'jointure. Tell me, dear Mr. MYRTLE, how

I shall communicate this affair to the poor creature whom I am going to forfake. If I know her temper, she loves me so well that

' fhe would rather fee me beggar'd and undone, than in a state of wealth and ease with another woman. She will call my endeavours, to make myself happy, being false to her.

Nay, I do not know but she may be fool enough to make away with herself; for the ' last time I talked to her, and mentioned this affair at a distance, she seemed to shew a cursed hankering after purling streams. Let me conjure thee, old MARMADUKE, if thou wilt

' not give me some advice, to give some to this

' poor woman; make her fenfible that a man does not take a mistress for better for worse, and that there is some difference between a "tha

T that heart

Nº 9

· lov

· I ca

' fub

it is] I may feems

not f in his occaf

thoro to the amou

what either

melar fuch

those as the

Th in ca Vatio

establ " diff

· lover " wo

Nº 9. great y forher, way myfelf y preon redly of l very on and

, how poor If I ll that d une with vours, o her. e fool et me

lover and a husband: but you know, better than 'I can' tell you, what to fay upon so nice a ' fubject. I am,

' Your most humble servant, W. T.

There is nothing which I more abhor than that kind of wit which betrays a hardness of heart. Inhumanity is never so odious, as when it is practifed with mirth and wantonness. I may make so free with my correspondent, he feems to be a man of this unlucky turn. I shall not fall into the same fault which I condemn in him; but, that I may be ferious on fuch an occasion, will defire my readers to consider thoroughly the evils which they are heaping up to themselves, when they engage in a criminal amour. If they die in it, they know very well what must be the dreadful consequence. either of them break loose from the other, the melancholy and vexation that are produced on for the fuch occasions are too dear a payment for ed this those pleasures which preceded, and are past, curfed as though they had never been.

The woman is generally the greatest sufferer ou wilt in cases of this nature; for, by the long obserto this vations I have made on both fexes, I have a man established this as a maxim, that "Women worse, "dissemble their passions better than men, but ween a "that men subdue their passions better than lover "women."

F

I have

I have heard a story to my present purpose, which has very much affected me. The gentleman, from whom I heard it, was an eye-witness of several parts of it.

About ten years ago there lived at Vienna a German Count, who had long entertained a fecret amour with a young lady of a confiderable family. After a correspondence of gallantries, which had lasted two or three years, the father of the young Count, whose family was reduced to a low condition, found out a very advantageous match for him, and made his fon fenfible that he ought, in common prudence, to The Count, upon the first opporclose with it. tunity, acquainted his mistress very fairly with what had paffed, and laid the whole matter before her, with fuch freedom and openness of heart, that she seemingly consented to it. She only defired of him, that they might have one meeting more, before they parted for ever. The place appointed for this their meeting, was a grove which stands at a little distance from the They conversed together in this place for some time, when on a sudden the lady pulled out a pocket-pistol, and shot her lover into the heart, so that he immediately fell down dead at her feet. She then returned to her father's house, telling every one she met what she had done. Her friends, upon hearing her story, would

Nº 9would her ef her de out hi refolve fhould but fh that w that h fenten preher her fr When him w Count danger which frenzy was re Count better ions th o crin > for one day of before

more

ofe. ntleness na a ed a ider-. llan-, the was very s fon e, to porwith r beess of She e one The was a n the place ulled o the dead ther's

e had flory,

vould

would have found out means for her to make her escape; but she told them she had killed her dear Count, because she could not live without him; and that for the same reason she was resolved to follow him by whatever way justice should determine. She was no sooner seized, but she avowed her guilt, rejected all excuses that were made in her favour, and only begged that her execution might be speedy. She was fentenced to have her head cut off, and was apprehenfive of nothing but that the interest of her friends should obtain a pardon for her. When the confessor approached her, she asked him where he thought was the soul of the dead Count? He replied, that his case was very dangerous, confidering the circumstances in which he died. Upon this, fo desperate was her frenzy, that she bid him leave her, for that she was resolved to go to the same place where the Count was. The prieft was forced to give her better hopes of the deceased, from consideraions that he was upon the point of breaking off o criminal a commerce, and leading a new life, before he could bring her mind to a temper fit for one who was fo near her end. Upon the lay of her execution she dressed herself in all er ornaments, and walked towards the feaffold nore like an expecting bride, than a condemned criminal. My friend tells me, that he F 2 faw her placed in the chair, according to the custom of that place, where, after having stretched out her neck with an air of joy, she called upon the name of the Count, which was the appointed signal for the executioner, who, with a single blow of his sword, severed her head from her body.

My reader may draw, without my affistance, a suitable moral out of so tragical a story.

 On Thursday will be published, a neat pocket edition of Dr. Isaac Barrow's Discourses of Contentment, Patience, and Resignation to the Divine Will. Printed for J. Round, and Jacob Tonson, in the Strand, where may be had Boëtius of the Consolation of Philosophy, made English and illustrated with notes by the Lord Viscount Preston.

This day is published, printed with an Elzevir letter, in a neat pocket volume, the third edition of the Life and Character of Jane Shore, collected from our best historians, chiefly from the writings of Sir Thomas More, who was her cotemporary, and personally knew her. Humbly offered to the readers and spectators of her tragedy written by Mr. Rowe. Inscribed to Mrs. Oldfield. Printed for J. W. and sold by W. Lewis, Price Six-pence. N. B. There is added to this edition a very curious frontispiece, representing her doing penance in St. Paul's cathedral.

This day is published a neat pocket volume of Electra, a Tragedy. Translated from the Greek of Sophocles. Printed for J. W., and fold by W. Lewis, where may be had the Cid; or, the Heroick Daughter. Written by a gentleman of Oxford.

This day are published, Memoirs of the Life of Count de Gramont, containing in particular the amorous intrigues of the court of England in the reign of King Charles II. Translated from the French by Mr. Boyer.

Thursday,

N° 1

Nº 10

memore from in a program averficoccafi maker ferve to ref and Cout is visited fession thing

Th

more

* AI Notes, ibidem, the ched ap.

Nº 9

rom

nce,

ion of and Jaceb confo-in a racter from orary, s and ed to ewis, very aul's

ford. Grathe lated

ay,

N° 10. Thursday, March 18, 1714 *.

-Magis illa placent quæ pluris emuntur.

Thave lately been very much teazed with the thought of Mrs. Anne Page, and the memory of those many cruelties which I suffered from that obdurate fair one. Mrs. Anne was in a particular manner very fond of China-ware, against which I had unfortunately declared my aversion. I do not know but this was the first occasion of her coldness towards me, which makes me sick at the very sight of a China-dish ever since. This is the best introduction I can make for my present discourse, which may serve to fill up a gap till I am more at leisure to resume the thread of my amours.

There are no inclinations in women which more furprize me than their passions for Chalk and China. The first of these maladies wears out in a little time; but when a woman is visited with the second, it generally takes possession of her for life. China vessels are playthings for women of all ages. An old lady of

F 3

fourscore

^{*} Additional Notes, vol. I. No 23, p. 254, and Note; and Additional Notes, ibidem, p. 430.

fourfcore shall be as busy in cleaning an Indian Mandarin, as her great-grand-daughter is in dreffing her baby.

The common way of purchasing such trifles, if I may believe my female informers, is by exchanging old fuits of cloaths for this brittle The potters of China have, it feems, their factors at this distance, who retail out their several manufactures for cast cloaths and Superannuated garments. I have known an old petticoat metamorphoied into a punch-bowl, and a pair of breeches into a tea-pot. For this reason my friend TRADEWELL in the city calls his great room, that is nobly furnished out with china, his wife's wardrobe. In yonder corner, fays he, are above twenty fuits of cloaths, and on that scrutore above a hundred yards of furbelow'd filk. You cannot imagine how many night-gowns, stays, and manteaus, went to the raising of that pyramid. The worst of it is, fays he, a fuit of cloaths is not suffered to last half its time, that it may be the more vendible; fo that in reality this is but a more dextrous way of picking the hufband's pocket, who is often purchasing a great vase of China, when he fancies that he is buying a fine head, or a filk gown for his wife. There is likewise another inconvenience in this female passion for China, namely, that it administers to them great matter

Nº 10. matter f ger and of my d this fra their ser their ca " a piec tetus, " " by c " to be " reason " come empt m fupernu vife the commo phers e of a tea comme three p of a w that the that it i fragility ought l at the f

with Se

confide

10.

ian

in les,

ex-

ns,

out

and old

wl,

Nº 10. matter for wrath and forrow. How much anttle this alls vith ner, and urany 15, last olė; ous is hen or a wise for reat tter

ger and affliction are produced daily in the hearts of my dear country-women, by the breach of this frail furniture! Some of them pay half their fervants wages in China fragments, which their carelesness has produced. "If thou hast " a piece of earthen ware, confider," fays Epictetus, "that it is a piece of earthen ware, and "by confequence very eafy and obnoxious "to be broken: be not therefore so void of " reason as to be angry or grieved when this "comes to pass." In order, therefore, to exempt my fair readers from fuch additional and supernumerary calamities of life, I would advise them to forbear dealing in these perishable commodities, till such time as they are philoso-phers enough to keep their temper at the fall the of a tea-pot or a China-cup. I shall further recommend to their ferious confideration these three particulars: first, that all China ware is of a weak and transitory nature. Secondly. that the fashion of it is changeable: and, thirdly, that it is of no use. And first of the first: the fragility of China is fuch as a reasonable being ought by no means to fet its heart upon, though at the same time I am afraid I may complain with SENECA on the like occasion, that this very confideration recommends them to our choice; F 4 our luxury being grown so wanton, that this coffee; kind of treasure becomes the more valuable that the the more eafily we may be deprived of it, and pable of that it receives a price from its brittleness, of the There is a kind of oftentation in wealth, which run throfets the possessor of it upon distinguishing them and size felves in those things where it is hard for the But, poor to follow them. For this reason I have use. V often wondered that our ladies have not taken shop fu pleasure in egg-shells, especially in those which are curiously stained and streaked, and which is altog are so very tender, that they require the nicest digious hand to hold without breaking them. But as have fe if the brittleness of this ware were not sufficient porcela to make it costly, the very fashion of it is ladies v changeable; which brings me to my fecond particular.

It may chance that a piece of China may furvive all those accidents to which it is by nature liable, and last for some years, if rightly situated and taken care of. To remedy, therefore, this inconvenience, it is so ordered that the shape of it shall grow unfashionable, which makes new fupplies always necessary, and furnishes employment for life to women of great and generous fouls, who cannot live out of the mode. felf remember when there were few China velfels to be seen that held more than a dish of coffee;

present

Did piles o like u there v be rang as bea is an o come, and m emplo they a fully d

it is par-

fur-

ature ated

this

pe of new oloy-

rous

my-

vef-

h of ffee;

t this coffee; but their fize is so gradually enlarged, hat there are many, at present, which are ca-, and pable of holding half a hogshead. The fashion eness, of the tea-cup is also greatly altered, and has which run through a wonderful variety of colour, shape, hem, and fize.

or the But, in the last place, China ware is of no have use. Who would not laugh to see a smith's taken shop furnished with anvils and hammers of which China? The furniture of a lady's favourite room which is altogether as absurd: you see jars of a pro-nicest digious capacity that are to hold nothing. I But as have feen horses and herds of cattle in this fine icient porcelain, not to mention the feveral Chinese ladies who, perhaps, are naturally enough represented in these frail materials.

> Did our women take delight in heaping up piles of earthen platters, brown juggs, and the like useful products of our British potteries, there would be fome fense in it. They might be ranged in as fine figures, and disposed of in as beautiful pieces of architecture; but there is an objection to these which cannot be overcome, namely, that they would be of some use, and might be taken down on all occasions to be employed in fervices of the family; befides that they are intolerably cheap, and most shamefully durable and lafting,

> > Saturday,

but wheir fite is the profusitive the

No II. Saturday, March 20, 1714.

Mæcenas atavis edite regibus.

BENTLEY'S Horace.

HE following epiftle is written to me from the parish of Gotham in Herefordshire, from one who had credentials from me to be received as an humble fervant to a young lady of the family which he mentions. Because it may be an inftruction to all who court great alliances, I shall insert it word for word, as it came to my hands.

Sweet Mr. MYRTLE,

· ACCORDING to your perfuation I came down here into the country, with a defign to ingraft myfelf into the family to which you recommended me; but I wish you had thought a little more of it, before you gave me that advice, for a man is not always made happy by having fettled himself in a powerful house; for riches and honour are ornamental to the possessors of them, only when those possessors have such arts or pen-· dowments dowmen ous wit whom y whose in made u not bett or confi but the dent be their a chuse b fuch is instrum made t taking of hun Thus things be acci hideou

By the who co lowed time t mic a fellow · Yo genea and k 10 11.

race. from

hire, be lady

fe it great as it

de-

you

vays n a

are en-

ents

dowments which would render them conspicuous without them; but these creatures to whom you advised me to be allied are such. whose interest it is to court privacy, and are made up of fo many defects, that they could not better recommend themselves to the world, or confult their own interest, than by hiding; but they are so little inclined to such a prudent behaviour, that they feem to think that their appearance upon all occasions cannot chuse but be advantageous to them; and yet fuch is the force of nature in biaffing all its instruments to the uses for which she has made them most fit, that they are ever undertaking what would make the most beautiful of human race appear as ugly as themselves. Thus they take upon them to manage all things in this country; and if any man is to be accused, arrested, or disgraced, one of these hideous creatures has certainly a hand in it, By these methods and arts they govern those who contemn them, and are perpetually followed by crowds who hate them: at the same time there is I know not what excessively co-fellows in their magnificences.

'You must know they set up extremely for genealogies, old codes, and mystic writings, and knowing abundance of what was never mic and diverting, to behold these very odd worth

worth knowing in the feveral ages in which you must was acted; but there is constantly, in all the ut they f pretend to, some circumstance which secretifierrible tends to raise the honour and antiquity of the last their family. Thus they are not contented luced, we as all we the rest of the world are, to become hand, to more antient every day than other as time mountain paffes on, but they grow old backwards, and faid by t every now and then they make some new pur-tain in chase of musty rolls and papers, which, they sir Rose tell you, acquaints them with some new matter knight. concerning their further antiquity. I met and is v here, to my great surprise, ABEDNEGO the have be Jew, who used to transfer stock for me at family Change-alley. I was going to falute him, but It we he tipped me the wink, and taking me apart account at a proper opportunity, defired me not to will go discover him: for, says he, laughing, I am declare come down here as a cheat! He explained great is himself further, that his way was, to get some lations paper that was mouldy, dusty, or moth-eaten, me with and write upon it Hebrew characters, which he fold to Sir Anthony CRABTREE's library*. inimitably

*This character of Sir A. CRABTREE was originally defignther chafti ed for the E of Oxford; and Peter Brickbust was meant their would to reprefent Mr. Foley. These are the gashes and wounds which never close, which the hand of true Genius only can would no instict. They were given by Steele, to the great merriment there are, of the town, and with the general approbation of the nation, in revenge for the parts they played in the expulsion of Steele Writings from the House of Commons; and the ingenious severity of this from the House of Commons; and the ingenious severity of this inimitably

You his ridicul

apart

ot to

I am

ained

fome

aten,

hich

this

tably

which you must know, there is nothing so monstrous all the ut they can make pass upon the people; so fecret errible are the CRABTREES in this county.

uity of the last piece of antiquity which they pro ntented luced, was a letter written, in Noah's own become hand, to their ancestor, and found upon a is time mountain in Wales (which, by the way, is als, and faid by them to be the oldest and highest mountain in the world), directed to their ancestor is, they Sir ROBERT CRAB-TREE, an Antediluvian matter knight. This, fir, paffes very currently here, I met and is well received, because all allow there to the have been no faces like theirs in any other ne at family fince the flood.

, but It would be endless to give you a distinct account of these worthies in one letter, but I will go as far as I can in it. I was, when I declared my love, appointed an hour in their great hall, where were affembled all their relations and tenants; but, instead of receiving me with civility, as one who defired to be of

You his ridiculous puppets on that occasion. They underwent farefign-ther chastifement, and were again exhibited to mockery, with meant their wounds still bleeding, by the publication of No 14, the fequel of this spirited paper. ADDISON, we may easily believe, y can would not baulk his frind's merriment; and in both numbers there are, probably, some of his oblique strokes given with hearty in, in good-will. See STEELE'S "Apology for himself and his writings," passim.

' their

covers their family, as they know not how to she power and greatness, but by doing things ten ible and difagreeable, Mr. PETER BRICKDUST flands up before all the company, and enters into a downright invective against me, to shew that I was not fit to be entertained among them. They call him here at Gotham, and in all these parts, the accuser, because it is his natural propenfity to think the worst of every Though the implement has a very great estate, the poverty of his foul is such, that he will do any thing for a further penny. He condescends to audit part of the rents of Sir · ANTHONY's estate, and though born to a · better fortune than the knight himself, is his His bufiness about him is to find utter flave. out somebody, or other for him, from time to time, on whom to exercise his great power and ' interest. PETER has the very look of a wicked one of low practice. PETER is made for a lurcher; and as being a creature of prey, he rifes to the object he aims at, as if he were going to fpring at fome game; but he slinks, as you may have feen a cur at once exert and check his little anger when he fees a strange mastiff. ralists fay all men have something in their afpect of other animals, which resemble them in constitution. PETER's countenance difcovers mixture owl. I former, latter. he was feeling extrava with a folly o offende > quarte there f poffibl gentle tradef 'afpect

'incap and y 'attent

his b 'ferve ' thou

him ties

'affer ' mad

or o 'ings o flier

gs ter

K Dust

enters

fhew.

mong

nd in

is na-

every great

at he

He f Sir

o a

his

find

e to

and

ked

lur-

sto

to nay

ttle

tu-

af-

em

if.

ers

covers him a creature of fmall prey; it is a mixture of the face of a cat, and that of an owl. He has the spiteful eagerness of the former, blended with the stupid gravity of the latter. He flood behind a post all the while he was talking, and groped it as if he were feeling for hobnails. All that he faid was fo extravagant, wild, and groundless, and urged with a mien for fuitable to the falthood and folly of it, that I was rather diverted than offended at BRICKDUST. When from another quarter of the hall, placed just under a gallery, there flood up the knight's brother. It is impossible to express the particularity of this gentleman. His mien is like that of a broken tradesman the first day he wears a sword; his 'aspect was fad, but rather the face of a man incapable of mirth, than under any forrow, and yet he does not look dull neither, but 'attentive to both worlds at once, and has in 'his brow both the usurer and the saint. 'served great respect paid to him; but me-'thought fome leavings of conscience made 'him look fomewhat abashed at the great civili-'ties which were paid him. He roundly 'afferted I was not worth a groat, and indeed 'made it out in a moment; for, by some trick or other, he had got in his custody all the writings which make out the title to my estate.

What

What made this whole matter the more extravagantly pleasant was, that there is an odd droning loudness in the brother's voice, which made a large Irish Greyhound open at every pause he made. That great surly creature, made so docile and servile, was to me matter of much entertainment and curiosity. The knight's brother, I assure you, spoke with a good steady impudence, and having been long inured to talk what he does not mean, he looks as if he meant what he faid. 'The pleafantry of this excellent farce is, that all these fellows were bred Presbyterians, ' and are now fet up for High Churchmen. They carry it admirably well, and the partizans do not diffinguish that there is a difference beween those who are of neither fide, from egenerous principles, and those who are disinterested only from having no principles at all. The knight himself was not in the country, but is expected every day; they fay he is a precious one. They make me expect he will treat me after another way. His manner is very droll; he is very affable, and yet ' keeps you at a distance; for he talks to every body, but will let nobody understand him. ' Here is a gentleman in the country, a good ' intelligent companion, that gives me a very · pleasant idea of him: he says, he has seen · him him g pany, along they ment

Nº II.

perha marry

again can h fpect

· P.

* * F

" farther
" would
" was let
" by the
" inflant

" confirm

" the To

the F

The field or gibrown; far exceemakes the and thicking any the oil 5

Coffee-h o II.

ex-

odd

hich

very

ure,

atter

The

th a long

he

e is,

ans,

nen.

zans

be-

rom

dif-

es at

the

y he

t he

nner

yet-

very im.

rood

very feen

him

him go through his great hall full of company, and whisper every man as he passed along; when they have all had the whisper, they have held up their heads in a filly amazement, like geese when they are drinking: but perhaps more of this another time; you would marry me into this goodly house!

I thank you for nothing, dear Sir, and am your humble servant for that.

'P. S. Here is a story here, that Mr. What'D'YE-CALL laughs at all they pretend to do 'against him, and is prepared for the worst that 'can happen. To inure himself to be a public 'spectacle, they say, he rid an hour and a half,
'at noon-day, on Wednesday last, behind Charles
'the First at Charing cross.'

 FLYING POST, March 27, 1714. "We have now farther evidence how fure fome folks were that Mr. STEELE would be expelled, &c. for not only the French ambassador was let into the secret, but even Mr. S—r, his cheese-monger, by the Seven Dials, who laid 100 l. to a shilling, on the 17th instant, and put half a crown into an apothecary's hands to confirm the wager, that the Commons would send STEELE to the Tower, which he said was too good for him." No 3468.

The famous powder for the hair, which infallibly changes red or grey hair into a fine jet black, or agreeable light or dark brown; and also an oil, which for its extraordinary qualities, far exceeds every thing yet known of the kind. It certainly makes the hair grow, though the person never had any before, and thickens it when thin, either in young or old, without giving any offence to the head. The powder 2s. and 6d. the box, the oil 5s. the bottle. To be sold only at the Temple Exchange Coffee-house in Fleet-street. Post Boy, June 26, 1714. Z.Z. L. L. L. N° 2985.

G

Tuesday,

N° 12. Tuesday, March 23, 1714.

When love's well tim'd, 'tis not a fault to love, The ftrong, the brave, the virtuous, and the wife, Sink in the foft captivity together.

PORTIUS in CATO.

HE following letter, written in the finest Italian female hand, as beautiful as a picture or draught of a letter, rather than the work of a pen, in the finest small gilt paper, when opened, diffused the most agreeable odours, which very fuddenly seize the brains of those who have ever been fick in love. There is no necessity on such an occasion as this, that the epistle should be filled with sprightly expressions. The fold of the letter, the care in fealing it, and the device on the feal, are the great points in favours of this kind from the fair; for, when it is a condescension to do any thing at all, every thing that is not fevere is gracious. As foon as I looked upon the hand, my poor fond head would needs persuade itself that it came from Mrs. PAGE; but I read, and found it was the acknow-

SII provi

nerit e any; tl

that I per.

the exterior

than beg t

ing ac

" know to th

It is that of are eve than q circum

place,

Nº 12,

ife,

CATO.

ft Ita-

icture

c of a

ened,

very

e ever

fuch ild be acknowledgment of an obligation, I have not merit enough ever to be capable of laying upon any; the letter is thus,

' Mr. Myrtle, March 19, 1714.

SINCE you have taken upon yourself the province of Love, all transactions relating to that passion most properly belong to your Paper. I beg the favour of you to insert this my epistle in your very next, in order to give the earliest notice possible of my having received very great favour and honour done to me, by some one to whom I am more obliged than it can ever be in my power to return. I beg therefore that you will insert the following advertisement, and you will oblige (though unknown)

Your fervant, and great admirer,

' A. B.'

"A certain present, with a letter from an un-"known hand, hath been very safely delivered to the party to whom directed."

It is the nicest part of commerce in the world, that of doing and receiving benefits. Benefits are ever to be considered rather by their quality than quantity; and there are so many thousand circumstances, with respect to time, person, and place, which heighten and allay the value, that

G 2

even

old of levice rs of conthing as I head

from

as the

mow-

even in ordinary life it is almost an impossibility Some alters in every individual case that can happen, . Son and there is fomething arises in it, which is for The f inexplicable, that none but the persons con know cerned can judge of them, and those, as well as ease; all other persons, are incapable of giving judg. tress a ment in their own case. All these circumstances I into are still more intricate in that part of life which within is naturally above the rules of any laws, and juries c must flow from the very soul to be of any regard at all, and are more exquisitely valuable and Before confiderable, as they proceed more or less from the offer affection, without any manner of respect to the fore ne intrinsic worth of what is given, and it is in ceived, different whether it be a bit of ribband or a and the jewel. The Lover in the comedy is not me. fervien thinks abfurd, where he prates of his rules and dress w observations on this subject.

'You must entertain women high, and bribe 'all about them. They talk of Ovid and his 'Art of Loving; be liberal, and you outdo his a gentl precepts .- The art of Love, Sir, is the art of pany e giving.—Be free to women, they'll be free to whimfi 'you. Not every open-handed fellow hits it ligation in the same give up lap-fulls, and yet and manner, you know, of fake. doing a thing, is more than the thing itself .- he wife

. Nº 12 12.

veying thing, than th

· Some for wh

Nº 12 12.

d his ibility Some drop a jewel, which had been refused use it bluntly offered.

Some lose at play what they design a present.

h is for The skill is, to be generous, and seem not to s con. know it of yourfelf, it is done with fo much yell as ease; but a liberal blockhead presents a mis-judge tress as he would give an alms.

tances I lintend all this upon the passion of Love which within the frictest rules; but benefits and inny re. is arrived to such a height as to be mutual.

le and Before that, all presents and services are only from the offerings of a flave to a tyrant; it is thereto the fore necessary, to make them worthy to be reis in. ceived, to shew that they proceed from affection, and that all your talents are employed in subteme. ferviency to that affection. The skill and ades and dress which is used on these occasions in conveying presents, or doing any other obliging bribe thing, is for this reason much more regarded than the presents or actions themselves. I knew do his a gentleman who affected making good comart of pany chearful, and diverting himself with a. rce to whimfical way he had of laying particular obd yet and making each believe it was done for her w, of fake. Thus he would make a ball, and tell one lf .- he wished she would give him leave to name Some for whom it was principally intended: another,

that

that he was overjoyed to fee her there, for that he was fure, had she not, nobody elfe would have been there that evening. He would whif. per a third, who was brought thither by a relation, and without being named, " And did your " cousin believe she introduced you hither? there " is a gentleman yonder faid, the came with you, " and not you with her." By this wily way he was by all esteemed the most obliging fine gentlewas by all esteemed the most obliging fine gentle-contem man; that was so genteely said, and the other manner thing fo prettily contrived, that who but is in th CHARLES MYRTLE with all the fair and delight. ful, in his time. About his flourishing years the flage had a particular liveliness, owing to this paffion, but too often to this paffion abused and misrepresented. OTWAY, who writ then, exposed, in his play of "Venice preserved," the bounty of a filly disagreeable old finner, who at that time was a great pretender to politicks, in which he was the most ungainly creature, and nothing could be more ridiculous than ANTONIO (for fo he calls him) a Politician, except An-TONIO a Lover. This grim puzzled letcher is thus treated by his AQUILINA, whom he keeps and visits: in one of those lovely moments she fays to him, "I hate you, detest you, loath " you, I am weary of you, I am fick of you-" crazy in your head, and lazy in your body; " you love to be medling with every thing, and if yo thing ing pol were the avourit of Veni " pines poor A not only country those w figned t ruffian

But ! a neigh letter.

. (

' AS doors ' found better 'you d

vert '

s, in

and

ONIQ AN-

ner is

keeps

s fhe

loath

011-ody; , and

ce if

NP 12. that if you had not money you are good for no-would thing." This imperious wench of this frib-whif ing politician was in the interests of those who rela-were then attempting to destroy his country; your he rates him in behalf of Pierre, who is her there avourite, and is then plotting the destruction you, of Venice. "—— Where's my lord, my hapay he "piness, my love, my god, my hero?" This entle- contemptible image represents, in a very lively other manner, how offensive every endeavour to please but is in the man who is in himself disagreeable; light poor Antonio, to satisfy an amorous itch, must years not only maintain his wench, but support every ng to ruffian in her favour that is an enemy to his bused country; which will for ever be the fate of those who attempt to be what Nature never dethen, " the figned them, Wits, Politicians, and Lovers. ho at

But I will break off this discourse, to oblige a neighbour, who writes me the following etter.

Good Mr. MYRTLE,

'AS I am your near neighbour, within two doors of the Lover's Lodge, and within the found of your melodious bass-viol, I cannot better express my gratitude for that favour 'you do my ears, than by inviting you to divert your eyes in my large gallery, which is

G 4 f now on now garnished from top to bottom with the finest paintings Italy has ever produced: I dare promise myself you will find such variety, and fuch beautiful objects, of both history and landscape, profane and sacred, that it will not only be sufficient to please and recreate the fight, but also to yield satisfaction and pleasure to your mind, and instructive enough to inform and improve every body's elfe.

When you have well viewed and confidered the whole collection, then I am to leave it to you, whether you will not think it may be of use to the readers of your Lover (which I understand is to come out to-morrow, very

'luckily for me the day before my fale begins) to recommend the viewing of my collection to them, as a very agreeable and instructive amusement to all persons in love. But this, and every thing else that may concern me or my collection, I leave to Mr. MYRTLE's judgment, and known readiness to serve mankind in their particular stations of life. I am, Sir, Your most obedient,

' and obliged humble fervant,

express the continued to

' JAMES GRAME.

Thursday,

Nº I

Multi de

trayed the infinito r fympa ments that m made better hereto loft gr while Many fure o

and h

to wa

mand had o d: I riety,

Nº 12.

t will create and

elfe. dered it to ay be vhich very gins) ection this, ne or judg-

Sir,

ME.

fday,

Nº 13. Thursday, March 25, 1714.

Multi de magnis, per somnum, rebu' loquuntur. Luck.

THE strong propensity that, from my youth, I have have had to love, hath betrayed me into innumerable fingularities, which the infenfible part of mankind are apt to turn into ridicule. The aftonishing accounts of sympathy, fascination, errantry, and enchantments, are thereby become so familiar to me, that my conversation, upon those subjects, hath made several good people believe me to be no better than I should be. My behaviour hath heretofore been fuitable to my opinions. I have loft great advantages by waiting for lucky days; and have been looked upon severely by fair eyes, while I expected the benign aspect of my stars. Many a time have I miffed a ball, for the pleafure of walking by a purling stream; and chose to wander in unfrequented folitudes, when I might have been a king at " questions and commands." It is well known what a prospect I had of rifing by the law, if I had not thought

Nº 13.

of Mou

fick, to either t

forced

incanta

to her

joy and which

CLEAN

felf up the tre

reache

feeding

fpread

voice

" Cru " wre

" ness felf, He ha

whith

inexp

tacle.

at len

his ar

at the faid h

" wh

" hin

it more noble to fill my fludy with poems and romances, than with dull records, and mutable acts of parliament. I intend, at some convenient feason, to communicate to the publick a cata. logue of my books; and shall, every now and then, oblige the world with extracts out of those manuscripts, which love and leifure have drawn from my pen. I have a romance, in feven neat folios, almost finished; besides novels, ditties, The following and madrigals innumerable. story is collected out of writers in so learned a language, that I am almost ashamed to own it, I must say for my excuse, that it was compiled in my twentieth year, upon my leaving the univerfity, and is adapted to the tafte of those who are far gone in romance; not to mention the feveral morals that may be drawn from it. I have thought fit to call it,

The Dreams of ENDYMION.

THE night was far advanced, and fleep had fealed the eyes of the most watchful lovers, when on a fudden a confused sound of trumpets, cymbals, and clarions, made all the inhabitants of Heraclea start from their beds in terror and amazement. An eclipse of the moon was the occasion of this uproar; and a mixt multitude of all ages and conditions ran directly to the top

Nº 13. s and atable enient cata. w and those lrawn neat itties, wing ned a vn it. piled uniwho the

had vers, pets, tants and the tude top

of

t. I

of Mount Latmos, with their instruments of mufick, to affift the fair planet, which they imagined either to have fainted away, or to have been forced from her sphere by the power of magical incantations. As foon as they had restored her to her former beauty, they returned home with joy and triumph, to take that benefit of repofe which they thought their piety deserved. Only CLEANDER, the amorous CLEANDER, gave himfelf up to his musings, and, wandering through the trees that cloath Mount Latmos, infenfibly reached the fummit of the mountain. He was feeding his eye with the fine landskip that was spread before him, when he heard a languishing voice utter these words intermixt with fighs; "Cruel goddess, why wilt thou make me "wretched by the remembrance of my happi-" ness!" " Ye powers," faid CLEANDER to himfelf, " is not that the voice of ENDYMION?" He had no fooner faid this, than he crept along whither the voice directed him, and faw to his inexpressible astonishment the following spectacle. This strange object was a man stretched at length on a declivity of the mountain, with his arms across his breast, and his eyes levelled at the moon. "Thou fair regent of the moon," faid he, "after the enjoyment of a goddess, "why wilt thou degrade thy lover, and throw "him back to Mount Latmos and mortality?

"Ah, inconstant! thou thinkest no more of "Endymion." "It is he, it is he," cried Cle, ander, "it is Endymion, or the ghost of my "friend." With these words he ran to him, and caught him in his arms with the warmest expressions of transport. If Cleander was overjoyed, Endymion was no less; and their endearments had lasted a long time, if Clean. Der's curiosity had not spurred him to learn the cause of Endymion's long absence from Heraclea, his adventures, and the reason of his odd complaints. After repeated entreaties, Endymion delivered himself in the following manner.

You may remember, that my frequent contemplation of the heavens had gained me the reputation of a great astronomer, amongst the fages of Heraclea. But, had there not been more powerful motives, I had not, for thirst of knowledge, abandoned the good-natured ladies of our city, with so much youth and vigour about me. You must know, that I had so often dreamt that Diana looked kindly on me, that I went to her temple at Ephesus to learn the will of the goddess. I was surprized to find her famous statue there entirely to resemble the lovely image that had a thousand times smiled on me, in my visions. The succeeding night I bribed the

no 13.

the pri
pafs th
faid wl fell in paffed
few th
with a defs,
beg eterr
I pr plac char

com

of ranswer

heard and g I Ev A

at m wate myft powe

Acc

J° 13. re of CLE. my him, mest was ren-EAN. the Icra. odd Enving conthe een' ft of dies our ften at I llof ous rely

the bed

me, the

the priestess with a considerable sum, to let me pass the time within the temple. After I had faid whatever a violent passion could inspire, I fell in a trance before the shrine that encompassed her statue, and to my inexpressible joy few the goddess descend, and bid me ask her, with a fmile, whatever I defired. 'Bright god-' defs,' faid I, ' were I to have my wish, I would beg that the pleasure, I now enjoy, might be eternal. But, fince that is too much, give me, I pray thee, a feat among the stars, that may ' place me ever in thy view, and nearest to thy 'chariot. Or, if the number of the stars be compleat, and the destinies deny me this, grant me at least to be wholly thine upon earth, and disdain not the present that I make thee of myfelf. Whether in heaven, or in earth, answered the goddess, 'I will lose no oppor-'tunity to gratify thee.' Scarce had the uttered these words, but I lost the fight of her, and only heard the found of her quiver, as she turned and glided away.

I related my vision the next morning to EVADNS the priestess, who expressed great joy at my fuccess, and, having sprinkled me with water from the facred fountain, and fpoken mysterious words, dismissed me with a viol of powerful juices, and instructions how to use it. According to her commands, I repaired to this mountain,

mountain, where having drunk off the enchanted draught, I lay stretched upon the ground, and fixed my eyes with delight on the moon. Suddenly, methought, the heavens were cleft, and an ivory chariot, drawn by horses, or dragons, took me up, and whirled me over cities, rivers, forests, and oceans, in a moment of time. I was, at length, fet down in the middle of a wood, where the face of nature was more delicious than the imagination of poets or painters have yet described. I had not walked long before I heard the voices of women, and at my drawing near I perceived DIANA in the midst of her nymphs. The beautiful virgins were placed round her, under the shadow of trees: some of them lay stretched on the grass, others were viewing themselves in the streams: here was one sharpening the point of an arrow, there another was stroaking a hound: their horns were hung upon the boughs, and their bows and quivers were carelessly scattered upon the ground. The queen herself was less distinguished by her golden bow and filver crescent, than by that beauty which had long held me captive. I ruftled a little too eagerly through the boughs where I had concealed myfelf, when a nymph that flood near her, casting a look towards me, cried out, " A man! a man!" At that word

DIAN cried "by bu" the growthem at mowenic

Nº 13

word

myfe man and that blood

down

ditio

one vour

in. Hyr on t pant puri To raised!

Nº 13. e enthe n the were es, or over ment the . e was ets or alked and n the rgins w of grafs, ams: row, their their upon difcresheld ough when k tothat

word

word one of the oldest of the virgins bent her bow at me, and had shot me through the heart, if DIANA had not feafonably interposed. "Hold." cried the goddess, " if he must die, let him die " by my hand. Give me," continued fhe, " the " bundle of arrows that CUPID presented me with " the other day, when we hunted in the Idalian "grove." A pretty young nymph having put them in her hands, the threw arrow after arrow at me, till I had received a hundred wounds, which conveyed fuch a fubile poison into my blood, that I lost my fight, staggered, and fell down dead. I had not lain long in that condition, when, to my great amazement, I found myself in the arms of DIANA, drest after the manner of her nymphs: and I faw the light and her eves at the same time. I found, after that, she had used that seeming cruelty to conceal our loves; and thenceforward I passed for one of her fex, and was looked upon as the favourite nymph of her train. My days were fpent in those sports which she takes pleasure in. How often have we ranged the defarts of Hyrcania! how agreeably have we wandered on the banks of Peneus or Eurotas! how many lions have we courfed in Getulia! how have we panted after the swiftest deer in Crete, and pursued the tigers of Armenia! but our nights-To what a pitch of glory and happiness was I thee, that goddeffes themselves are inconstant?

It is in the nature of females to be fuddenly hurried from one extreme to another. Love or hate wholly poffesses them; they have no third paffion. What they will, they will abfolutely.

and demand unlimited obedience. They are ever prepared to flew how little they can value their lovers, and facrifice what was once held dear, to their ambition and thirst of dominion. When they cease to love, they endeavour to persuade us, by coldness and slighting usage, able to impose so far upon our understanding, and to give the lie to our fenses, they endeavour to make us lofe the memory, as they have loft the defire of possession. After so long a course of fighs, vows, fidelity, fubmiffion, and what-where the goddess descended with a veil over her face; but, upon hearing a noise of trumpets and clarions, left me without speaking, and fled that we never were beloved.

No 13. N° 13 raised! how much happier yet were my lot, if I was the mouth that tafted were allowed to reveal plaint my joys! but, oh CLEANDER! what shall we after t think of the other fex, when I shall have affured faint EN than h laugh Instan had d one o fast to them ; wome MION. amoui cule t ginati enoug prove the fe they a trigue ever lovers talk of, I was hurried away from and to the happy regions I have described, in the same manner that I went; and, not many hours fince, the dr Ic found my body extended on this mountain,

But, not being

deligh kened man v respec to the moon in an instant. The affurance that I was Nº 13.

ot, if reveal

all we

fured

Stant?

denly

ve or third

utely,

y are

value

held

inion.

ur to ifage,

being ding,

avour

e lost

ourse

what-

from fame

fince,

ntain,

over

mpets d fled

e that I was was abandoned, made me vent those complaints, which were still the more just, because, after the favour of a goddess, I shall loath the faint beauties of Heraclea.

ENDYMION had no fooner spoke these words, than he and his friend were surprised with a loud laugh from behind a bush that grew near them. Instantly started up three young women, who had dogged CLEANDER in his folitary walk, one of which was his mistress. They ran so fast to Heraclea, that he could not overtake them; and before ten that morning, all the women of the town had had a fling at ENDY-MION. Though they fecretly believed his amours to be real, they had the malice to ridicule them, as the visions of a distempered imagination. Nay, these giggling gipsies had credit enough to get the poor gentleman jested into a proverb. Infomuch that if a lover blabs out the fecret, the Heracleans call him a lunatick; they ask a pretty fellow that conceals his intrigues, if he hath "a mistress in the clouds?" and to boast of favours is, with them, to have the dreams of Endymion.

I could dream on much longer with great delight to myself at least, but that I am awakened by the following letter from a gentleman whom I have great reason to have an high respect for, having frequently been an eye-witness

H

Nº L

04

I A

bride

ding

the re

all wl

entert

· R

cotl

of t

rece

gene

' may

' prov

ous!

tary

who

ness of his behaviour, both as to love and I have feen him as a Lover win by fair courtship at least fifty ladies; and as a sol. dier in open field obtain compleat victories al. ways over superior numbers, and sometimes observed the whole owing to his single valour.

bedied a bash that grew negr t

I AM to have a benefit play on Monday

y our best

e next, and the diffress of the flory depending supon love, I hope it will find room in your paper. It is the Albion Queens, with the death of Mary Queen of Scotland; where that il· lustrious Lover, the Duke of Norfolk, rather than he will deny his flame, gives up his life,

Whenever I fee you, I shall do you bonour *, and am, Sir, your most humble servant,

GEORGE POWEL!

* See STEELE's " Apology, &c." and " TATLER, with Notes," ut Supra.

* Just published, the ingenious and entertaining Memoin of Count Grammont, who lived in the Court of King Charles II. from the Restoration till the year 1680, and was afterwards embaffador from the King of France to King James II.; containing the Amorous Intrigues of those two Princes, and of the Dukes of Monmouth, Buckingham, Ormond, and Hamilton; Earls of Arran, Dorset and Middlesex, Rochester, and Radnor; Mr. Churchill, now Duke of Marlborough; Col. Talbot, afterwards Earl of Tyrconnel; Mr. Germaine, Mr. Montague, Mr. Killigrew, &c.; with great variety of comical adventures and characters masterly drawn.

Saturday

N° 13. we and win by s a folries alnetimes lour.

Monday ending n your e death that ilrather nis life. mour *,

ER, with

OWEL.

t,

Memoirs tharles II. wards emcontaining the Dukes; Earls of nor; Mr. afterwards Mr. Killind charac-

aturday

Nº 14. Saturday, March 27, 1714.

Oderint dum metuant.

Motto on Sir Anthony CRABTREE's coach.

I AM to day-very busy, having a wedding suit for a gentleman, and the knots of the bride, offered to my consideration, and the wedding itself to be on Easter Tuesday; therefore the reader must be contented with this letter, all which I do not myself understand, for the entertainment of this day.

'Mr. MYRTLE,

'READING the letter in your Lover of the 20th from your friend concerning the family of the CRABTREES, I was pleased at the non-reception of your friend into that ridiculous generation; in which family, as I am told, may be found an antique record in Hebrew, proving their original. Sir Anthony is cautious of shewing the manuscript; but his secretary, with whom I am well acquainted, and whose knowledge is great in crabbed characters.

ters, does affure me, it is writ in the prophane e ignorant style used by the Fanaticks before the Restoration, and seems to be formed out of the phrases of the Revelations, with many periods ending with the fight of the beaft, and the image of the beaft, and the like. I think your friend ought to be thankful for his deliverance: however, I cannot fay Sir Anthony was always for destroying every ' thing, having once faved (not his country, but) his house. The story is thus related by a fervant then living in the family. It feems, in the time of Sir RALPH, father to this precious · Stick Anthony, there was in the family a ' man that had lived long, but wickedly, under the cloak of religion; but at length was dif-· covered to have defiled the house with a maid fervant who proved with child, which was an abomination to Sir RALPH, who turned both out of doors, without paying them their wages, being confiderable, and ordered the bed wherein the crime had been committed, with the furniture of that room, to be burnt, which they were accordingly. The fellow thought, by marrying the woman, he might fo far ingratiate himself into his master's favour, as to get their wages; but Sir RALPH was too religious to allow that any thing could be due to foly

Nº 14

fage

to i goo gen five

Sir to p

and he bed whi

night

hane plai

the beer can

mor

good ther

ber cong

01.

Nº 14. phane before d out many beaft, ke. I al for ay Sir every untry, d by a ms, in ecious mily a under as difa maid was an d both wages, whereth the which ought, far inas to 00 Te-

be due

010

to the wicked. Upon which the fellow refolved, fince he was to be a lofer, his mafter fhould be no gainer; therefore, fent a meffage to Sir RALPH, to let him know, if he would pay him, he had fomething of moment to impart to him, which might be for the good of him and his family: to this the old gentleman gave ear, and being ever apprehen-' five of fome plot or other against him (in which Sir ANTHONY takes much after him) resolved to pay the fellow, and have him examined; ' and when the great secret came out, it was, that 'he and the maid had lain together upon every bed in the house, and in every room; upon which the whole house and furniture was con-"demned to be burnt on a certain day; but, the 'night before the execution, Sir Anthony 'came down to his father's, and with a high hand faved house and goods. This is the ' plain well-known matter of fact, and this is 'the first house that I ever heard of to have been fo near burning by the fire of Love. I can affure you, the family is now grown much 'more polite; but having been bred in fuch 'strictness and formality, during the time of good Sir RALPH, both Anthony and his brother ZACHARIAH come into a wench's cham-' ber with the same air they used to enter their congregations of faints. It is an hard thing H 3 f to Je 14.

Sir

provi

noun

Well

them

the g eftate

pedla

peop

away

' that the p ance

But this,

at a

as m

' Moo

Pedl low

'right

fami

'dare

f fhall

'agai

'how

to unlearn gestures of the body, and though Anthony has quite got over all the prejudices of his education, not only as to superstition, but as to religion also, he makes a very queer figure, and the persecuted Sneak is still in his face, though he now fets up for a perfecutor. ' If the four behaviour and hypocrify, which the enemies to Diffenters accuse them of, was f utterly forgotten, and which by their freedom and more open communication with the reft of the world, from the Toleration, is really at f an end, I fay, if all this were wholly out of the memory of man, all their rancour, spite, and obstinacy, might be revived among the CRABTREES. This particular, however, is to be more emphatically enlarged upon by those who shall write their history, which is, that they are impudent to a jest. They having as · little respect for mankind, as mankind has for them, they do not care how gross the thing is they attempt, fo they can carry it. Sir AN-THONY wanting a cause, the last circuit, to keep up the face of his grandeur, and to make himself popular, spoke to BRICKDUST to accuse some body for disrespect to an illustrious

* See No 11.

BRICKDUST * told him of a hawker who had books about him writ in favour of that house.

They could not find fuch a one; but

Nº 14. ough adices ition, queer in his utor. which f, was edom e rest ally at out of spite, g the , is to those , that ing as as for ning is ir ANgit, to make to acftrious | e; but no had house.

· Sir

Sir Anthony faid, that would do as well, provided they could perfuade people to pronounce the books were against that interest. Well, they got the poor hawker in amongst them at a county court, and, in spite of all that the gentlemen of greatest honour, quality, and estate, could fay, the cry went against the pedlar. There were indeed a great many people of fense and fashion, who are carried away by the CRABTREES, folicited to call out, that the hawker should be turned out of the place, when they faw, from the appearance for him, they could carry it no further. But they could procure nobody to do even this, but a natural fool, who had made sport at a Winchester wedding, and is every where 'as much known for an ideot, as if he had his 'Moorish dancer's habit and bells on, between jest and earnest they turned out the Pedlar, for the very contrary of what the fel-'low had done. Sir Anthony fays, this was 'right, and still professes he is a friend to that 'family; for, fays that merry cunning fellow. 'if I can bring it to that pass, that nobody shall 'dare to speak for them without my leave, I fhall eafily manage that nobody dare to be 'against them. This is, Mr. MYRTLE, the 'logick of the CRABTREES. But I know not how to relate half the fine things I know of H 4 them;

: maria

Nº 14

them; read Sancho Pancha's government in Barataria, get Hudibras by heart, cast your eye upon books of dreams, incantations, and witchcrafts, and it will give you some faint pictures of the exotic and comic defigns of this unaccountable race, who are (according to their own different accounts of their parts and births) occasionally Syrians, Egyp.

tians, Saxons, Arabians, and every thing but

Welch, British, Scotch, Irish, or any thing that is for the interest of these dominions,

As you are the patron of Love, I defire to know of you, whether, after this faithful representation of things, you ought to lament that your friend has been rejected by the CRABTREES. Your most humble servant,

EPHRAIM CASTLESOAL!

 In the press, and will speedily be published in octavo, Mr. Young's poem, intituled, "The Force of Religion: or, Vanquish'd Love." (Illustrated in the History of Lady Jane Grey.) In two books; adorned with a curious frontispiece, Printed for E. Curll at the Dial and Bible against St. Dunstan's church in Fleet-street; where may be had The Gentleman Accomptant; or, the Mystery of Accompts unfolded, and applied to the concerns of the nobility and gentry of England.

Just published, "The Principles of Christianity." Written originally in Latin by John Bona, the author of the "Guide to Eternity," and translated into English by J. E. Esq.; printed for J. Ker, at the Middle Temple Gate in Fleet-street.

Just published, "Love in a Wood; or, the Country 'Squire." A Farce. By G. J. printed for Fred. Burleigh in Amen-corner.

Tuesday,

alls

Nº 1

Crede :

in my and we chara youth duct It is to rocks fenge out It rather them their have them

lead

es and bus upon lo post siedu adi deucide are proteined counterment and live ou ean only of all parties: Each from the friment fryour

s, and e faint igns of

Nº 14

f their Egypng but thing inions, ful reament by the soar.

n octavo,
ion: or,
ady Jane

ady Jane ntispiece, Dunstan's man Acd applied Writ-" Guide printed

Squire."
-corner.
elday,

Nº 15. Tuesday, March 31, 1714.

Crede mibi, quamvis contemnas murmura famæ, Hic tibi pallori, Cynthia, versus erit. Proper.

I should be but a very ill guide to others, in the ways of this town, if I continually kept in my lodge. I do sometimes make excursions and visit my neighbours, whose manners and characters cannot but be of great use to the youth of this kingdom, whom I propose to conduct in safety, if they will follow my advice. It is the business of a pilot to discover shoals, rocks, and quicksands, in order to land his passengers in safety. I shall take pains to hang out lights, but if those who sail after me will rather chuse to be stranded (where I have given them a signal of danger) than sollow my course, their shipwreck is not to be imputed to me who lead them.

There are now in town, among the ladies who have given up all other confiderations, to gratify themselves in one sort of delight, three eminent above the rest for their charms and vices. The first can only please novices; the second seeks only men of business, and such of them as are between fools and, knaves; the third runs through the whole race of men, and has arts enough about her to enfnare them all, as well as defire enough to entertain them all. These ladies are professed courtezans, and live upon it.

first

The first I shall give an account of is JENNY LIPSY. All creatures of prey have their particular game, and never dream of any other. JENNY never aims at any but novices; and she makes her advances with so much skill, that the is feldom without two or three in pursuit of her, who are in their first month of a town life. I fate by her, a week or two ago, at a play: there was feated just before her a pretty fnug academick, who, I observed, was destined for her entertainment that evening. There fate by her a course hoyden in a black scarff, who feemed a fervant-maid stolen out with JENNY on this frolick to a play. JENNY, at every thing which paffed in the play that had little fense in it, was so delighted as not to contain herself from loud laughs, but particularly checked herself, with a well-acted romp-like confusion, when she was observed by the pretty young gentleman; her maid professing, in a lower voice, she would never come abroad with her again. Many kind looks however passed between tween ceived begge fing 1 was n fuch : ment. but 1 thing the e he w a civi

if the

there

Nº 15.

with T artfu has s addr She what cenc in h muc LIGI tinif riots

trea

they

feeks as are runs arts rell as ladies

r parother. d fhe that uit of n life. play:

play:
fnug
ed for te by
who NY on thing nfe in erfelf ecked
ufion, roung

lower

h her d between

tween my young gentleman and one he conceived as unskilled in the town as himself. She begged his pardon, two or three times, for pressing upon him negligently, and hoped there was no offence, in such a tone and voice, and such a natural impertinence, and want of judgement, as would have deceived any man in town but Roger Veterane, who suspects every thing. My young spark offered his service, at the end of the play, to see her out. Jenny said he was a stranger to her, though he looked like a civil body; but her maid interposed, and said, if the gentleman will get us out of the crowd, there can be no harm, since she would keep with her.

The second woman of consideration is that artful shy dame madam TWILIGHT. This lady has got a step or two in age, experience, and address, beyond Miss Jenny above mentioned. She has been above these ten years known for what she is; but she has preserved such a decency in her manners, and has so little frolick in her temper, that every lover takes it she is as much pleased with him, as he with her. Twilight therefore has passed her ten years libertinism in short marriages, rather than different riots. The many gallants whose relies she is, treat her with civility and respect where-ever they meet her; and every man statters himself

it

Nº I

fo g perie

hurti

is a ferve

noce

and

mou

fpar!

play

copi

which

min

fom,

is 25

that

of t

thos

the

tafte

wick

of i

the o

like

mof

wen

with layi

char

it is the necessity of her affairs made her take fuch a loose, but she certainly loved nobody but him. TWILIGHT, as I faid, is never outra. geoufly joyful, but can comply with a whisper, and retire very willingly with great reluctance, feldom discovering defire enough to overcome the confusion to which her compliance obliges But I must leave her character half drawn, and in the dress she often affects, a veil, to hasten to her who gives me most disquiet of any of her fex when I am endeavouring to fave the free and innocent from the flavery to which the affects to reduce all mortals, especially those of merit.

This lady, who is the heroine of to day's Paper, as well acquainted with this town as the plains of Arcadia, dignified and diffinguished among the loose wanderers of Love by the name of CLIDAMIRA DUSTG. WN, is mistress of the whole art of women; she can do what she pleases, with whom she pleases, and I have not yet known any one that could fave himself from her but by flight. She can, as occasion ferves, be termagant and haughty, if the follower is in his nature fervile; then again so humble and refigning to those who love and admire none but themselves! She can lead the conversation among raw youths who are proud of being admitted into her company, and will lifp and grow

No 15.

r take obody outrahisper, tance, rcome obliges drawn, eil, to iet of which

those

's Paas the uished name
of the
at she we not from erves, r is in e and none station ng ad-

grow

fe.

fo girlish, and prevail upon hardened and experienced rakes of the town, who are above hurting any thing but innocence. CLIDAMIRA is a female rake; the male ones, I just now obferved, affect mostly to have to do with the innocent, and CLIDAMIRA's passion is to deceive and bubble the knowing. To indulge this humour in herfelf, the has all the learning of a fpark of the town, is deep in miscellany poems, plays, novels, and romances; has, all the winter, copies of the verses, scandals, and whispers which are brought forth in London and Westminster; all the summer, those produced at Epfom, Tunbridge, and the Bath; her lewdness is as great, and her understanding greater than that of any of her admirers: by the force of the latter the is as much courted, even by those who have had her (as the phrase is) as the finest woman whose charms are yet untafted; her skill is such, that her practice in wickedness has not at all made her hypocrify of innocence appear aukward or unlovely, but the can be any thing the ever was to those who like what she was better than what she is, the most accomplished, frolic, and dissolute of all wenches. What makes me have no patience with madam Dustgown is, that fhe is now laying all her fnares, and displaying all her charms, to withdraw my heart from Mrs. PAGE. But

But she shall die; I will sacrifice her, to gain a smile for that merit from my own incomparable fair-one.

CLIDAMIRA has at this time three different keepers; a rich citizen, whom she has orders, upon occasion, to write to in the style of a widow who wants his charity; a married man of quality, whom she is to address so as that his lady, who is as jealous as a statesman, and admires her lord for the finest gentleman in the world, might read it; her third is a gentleman learned in the laws, whom she writes to as his client, when she has a mind to raise small sums to support her lavish gallant who lives upon gratifying her real passion, and sharing the hire of her prostitution. It was necessary last week her dear comrade should have a fine horse he had feen; she levied the price of him upon her flaves by the following method. She writes,

To her City Friend.

SIR,

DID I not know what acts of charity your worship daily does, and that your good lady is as inclined to do good as yourfelf, I should not take this liberty to move your compassion to the widow and fatherless. If your worship's business of ten

'my

Nº 1

· bu

med falar

fall noth

fta to fay

ap

ing fente

and at the fends

with will

Nº 15. gain com-

ferent rders, of a man that and in the

as his fums upon e hire week eman

rfe he upon She

your d lady hould affion rfhip's ufiness

Thomas T

bufiness should divert you from taking notice of this according to direction here under-written, I shall presume to wait upon your lady 'myfelf. I am, &c.'

The latter circumstance, being a threat, immediately produced a largess above her ordinary falary noting set more mint drew

The great skill is to write letters that may fall into any hands, even a wife's, and discover nothing. Her style to my Lord was thus:

My Lord, 100

'IS it possible you can doat with so much conflancy on the charms of a wife, to be blind to the thousand nameless things that I do and ' fay before you, even in her presence, to reveal 'a passion too strong to be smothered?'

My lady pouts ten days after the intercepting fuch a billet, mifinterprets every look and fentence of every friend she has, and keeps my Lord waking till he has dived into the matter, and fined for his quiet to CLIDAMIRA.

Her worthy chamber counsel is captivated at the prodigious wit of the creature, when the fends a bundle of old parchments from widow LACKITT, and has them lodged with his clerk with a couple of guineas, and underwrites the will give him his brief at her own lodgings. The

Nº 15.

The bufy creature, who is in joy when he is not actually taking pains, is so exquisitely exalted at the wit, cunning, and address, of deceiving that notable deep discerner his own clerk, that, for fear of appearing too dult for an hint himself, cash is immediately conveyed to his client, as left with him from the person who is to lend the money upon the mortgage. Thus the sly thief shows, though he is a man of business, if he would give his mind to it, he could be as notable a gallant as the best. She is accommodated, and her counsel is cheated in raptures.

 Richard Steele, Esq; is turned out of the office of Commissioner of Stamps; and Charles Vivian, Esq; succeeds him. Post-Boy, Jan. 9, 1713-14.

"A Letter from Mr. Jacob Bickerstaff, nephew to Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq. occasioned by the death of Queen Anne, to a Gentleman in Holland." Price 3d. Flying Post, No 3542, Sept. 16, 2714.

Notwithstanding the repeated impertmence of The CONTROLLER, and the threatened point of a secret dagger in the dark, under personal nominations as expressed in his paper; Mr. Cassleton, at the Penny-post-office, is ready to produce the Essay towards a coalition of parties in Great Britain; and by Saturday hopes to publish several vindications against the Spectator. Ibidem, Sept. 17, 1714.

a poem by John Lacy, Esq; the author also of the Ecclesiastical and Political History of Whig Land, with the character of a late Ecclesiastical Historian [Steele]. Post-Boy, Aug. 5, 1714.

Thursday

0

N°

Nº 1

Still n

have !

'S'

mad fider ple f

* See † Th

radulen

iction, 1

fo lo

No 15.

he is ly execeivclerk,
n hint

n hint to his who is Thus f bufi-could is acted in of Comeds him.

entitled, c Bickera Gentle-Sept. 16 of The dagger in its paper; oduce the ; and by the Spec-of Wit," Coclefiaftiacter of a 5, 1714nursday

Nº 16. Thursday, April 1, 1714.

Still mixt with vollies of impertinence.

ROCHESTER's Poems.

THE writer of the following letter being a person, if you will believe his own story, the most impertinently crossed in love that ever any mortal was, and allowing his letter to sit only for one day in the year; I have let him have his will, and made it the business of this.

' MR. MYRTLE,

SINCE I writ my last to you, wherein I gave you some account of the consounded usage which I met with from the mischievous and ridiculous race of the CRABTREES*, I have made it my business to enquire into and consider the arts and stratagems, by which a people so like in genius to the Cercopitheci + should so long be suffered to impose upon many wise,

* See LOVER, No 11, No 14, and notes.

† The inhabitants of the Island Pithecusa, who were very radulent and mischievously deceitful; hence arose the poetical iction, that Jupiter turned them into apes.

I

brave,

of April to fettle his schemes for the ensuing ' year; and yet, with all the hurry which he eternally appears in, he is the laziest thief living. One of his propositions for management is, to affect buftle, and avoid bufiness: this,

with feveral other as wife maxims, is fet down by his fecretary to be entered upon the first of April next. The next to that, as I could ' gather it out of Mr. Secretary's Coptic characters, is, Never to look beforehand, but do

Sir Anthony has had great success in folas well as you can in the prefent moment.

Nº 16

Nº

· fo fro tin

for the

hin. · bo

· hin

· une · mo

· Kn

of foli

f tere abl · A

' pre ' gio

" and it t ' rag

cep foll.

" pu

66

辛 " " Swift Flying

lowing this latter position; but his noddle is N° 164 ounty. I am occeffes ince in others.

of the is feem ility of Among which ed with know, days;

hies in the first ensuing hich he nief livegement is: this, et down

I could rec chabut do lent.

s in foloddle is fo full, by being always extricating himself from some present difficulty, that he has not time to reslect, that though men will bear some hardships into which they are surprized, they may be rouzed by repeated injuries.

'They tell me most incredible whimsies of him. Among the rest, that he shall take a book of humour and ridicule, and take upon 'him to draw out a scheme of politicks hid under those seeming pleasantries. A notable money-scrivener has informed me, that his Knighthood has conceived a mighty opinion of South Sea stock, not from the national and 'folid fecurity that is given to support the interest thereof, but from the following memorable passage in the 94th page of a book called 'A Tale of a Tub. Most people agree that 'piece was written for the advancement of reli-'gion only *; but Sir Anthony, who fees more 'and less than any other man living, will have 'it to be a collection of politicks; and the pa-'ragraph, upon which he grounds his kind conception of the fund abovementioned, is as follows.

"The first undertaking of Lord Peter was to upurchase a large continent lately said to have ^{* &}quot;If there be any truth in his "Tale of a Tub," Dr. "Swift derives the succession of his own church from the d—l." Flying Post, 1712.

I 2

" been discovered in Terra Australis incognita.

"This tract of land he bought a very great

" pennyworth from the discoverers themselves

" (though some pretend to doubt whether they " had ever been there), and then retailed it into over colonies, but were all shipwrecked in the "voyage. Upon which Lord Peter fold the " faid continent to other customers again, and

" again, and again, and again, with the same

" fuccess."

Mr. MYRTLE, if you publish this ribaldry I now fend you, be fure you chuse the day auspicious to the CRABTREES, (to wit) the first of April, a day wherein, time out of mind, e people have thought fit to divert themselves with passing upon their neighbours nonsense and imposition for wit and art. But to go on; in order to amass a vast sum of money, which he defigns to place in the fund, the benefits of which are fo mysteriously described in the abovementioned political discourse, Sir ANTHONY has resolved to part with the most valuable manuscripts in his library, which are actually fent to town, to be fold on the faid first day of April, and catalogues given gratis to all the Fellows of the Royal Society. things which he expects most for are as fol-' lows, Fobor Camolanthi's Rudiments of LetNo

· te

'th

" th

· ct

· G

· m

, an

fre

· ho rec

wh

' is

f at

foo

cui

· ZA

Lo:

cH.

80 fale

'the

· do

· loft

ters;

' men

great afelves r they it into carried in the d the

Nº 16.

d the d, and e fame

e day

mind, nfelves onfense to go noney, d, the cribed fe, Sir e most ch are gratis

The
as folf Letters;

ters; being the first scrawls made by the faid Camolanthi with his own hand, before the invention of writing, wherein is to be seen the first B that ever was made. The second curiofity is the very white wax which John a Gaunt had in his hand, when he made the famous conveyance by an overt-act of biting, and the following words.

- ! In witness that this is footh,
- ' I bite the white wax with my tooth.

'The third is an Egyptiam mummy, very fresh, and fit to be kept as a predecessor to any house which is so antient as to have lost the records of its ancestry.

The fourth is the first hallowed slipper which was kissed in honour of St. Peter, who is reported by hereticks to have worn none at all himself, but to have gone a-fishing barefoot. It would be endless to tell you all circumstances of these prodigious sellows, but Zachariah and Brickdust are gone post to London, to youch for these antiquities. Zachariah, Sir Anthony says, has a very good countenance to stand by the mummy at the sale, as well as to youch for the white wax in the conveyance: I don't know what they may do with you Londoners, but they have quite host themselves at Gotham, and the twelve wise

Nº 1

4 fliff

' him

pag to

· Ju

wil of ere

6 go

fici

in Par

· pla eaf

ani

gr

TH

wi wi

the the

" it

" ag

" in wl

all

· be

· T

it,

'Thus the CRABTREES, who indeed never had fense, have now lost the appearance of it; and Sir Anthony, for these ten days last past, could not get any body to whisper him, when he offers it; the party attempted stands full before him; and there you see poor Sir Anthony, in a need to whisper, jerking and writhing his noddle, and begging an audience of a Staret who stands in the posture of a man "stiff

Nº 16, 1, the thers. ; for h too cunbotother heard that more d Sir was him; iys of doing t him their otent never ce of s laft him, tands r Sir and ience man

· stiff

fiff with amazement, that he had not found him out before. If you will turn to the next page to that I quoted above, to wit, the next to the 94th, (which phrase I own I steal from Juvenal's Volveris à prima quæ proxima,) you will find that Sir Anthony stole the manner of his levy from Lord Peter's invention of erecting a whispering-office, for the public good and ease-of all-Eves-droppers, Phyficians, Midwives, fmall Politicians, Friends fallen-out, repeating Poets, Lovers happy or 'in despair, Bawds, Privy Counsellors, Pages, Parafites, and Buffoons.—An ass's head was ' placed so conveniently, that the party might eafily with his mouth accost either of the 'animal's ears. The other parts of that paragraph are too coarse to be repeated. Sir And 'THONY is mightily afraid his dear relations 'will hardly get fafe back again to him; and therefore, like the country fellow who faid, "it was pity there was not an act of parliament "against all foreigners that should pretend to "invade this land," he has given them a pass, which he thinks will be of as much force 'all over England, as it would lately have been in this county where he is a justice. 'There is one particular pleasant clause in 'it, wherein he requires all people, notwithflanding 14

- flanding their looks, to let them pass for honest men.
- ZACHARIAH disputed carrying that clause,
- and faid he was fure nobody could take him
- for any other; but Sir Anthony over ruled
- him, and in his fneering way faid, it could do him no harm to have it about him: which is
- s all at present,
 - ' From the most unfortunate of Lovers,

RICARDETTO LANGUENTI.

-  We hear that her Majesty was pleased this day to touch upwards of 200 persons for the Evil, the Lord Bishop of Exeter [Offspring Blackall] reading the office appointed for the purpose. DAWKES'S "News-letter," March 30, 1714.
- * March 21, 1714. A woman was executed at Vienna, for firiking a crucifix, her right hand being first cut off, and then her head. Ibidem.
- Yesterday morning Sir George Newland, one of the members of Parliament for this city, unfortunately threw himfelf out of his window in Salisbury Court, in Fleet-street, and died immediately. He had many years since received a contusion in his head by a fall from his horse, which occasioned a melancholy disposition, returning upon him usually Spring and Fall. This being fully proved to the jury, he was brought in a lunatic, Ibidem, March 27, 1714.
-  Last Thursday night the corps of Frederick Herne, Esq; was interred in the parish church of St. Stephen, Colman street; the charge of this pompous funeral was at least 500l. Ibidem. N. B. He was Deputy Teller of the Exchequer to the Lord Mansell, and one of the Commissioners appointed to settle the commerce between us and France.

Saturday,

N

Nº 17

Who Or was fever thun imag to the HER whill diffu was colo who at the noise

prec

ls for

Nº 16.

e him ruled ald do aich is

ers,

to touch f Exeter the purnna, for and then of the ew himeet, and a contufioned a ring and ght in a ne, Esq; n-street; Ibidem. ne Lord ettle the rday,

Nº 17. Saturday, April 3, 1714.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try,
Or with a voice endued the chattering pie?
'Twas witty want fierce hunger to appeale: Want taught their masters, and their masters these.

DRYDEN'S Persius.

MRS. Anne Page was smiling very graciously upon me, in a dream between seven and eight yesterday morning, when three thundering knocks at my door drove the fair image from my fancy, as Diana was hurried to the moon by the cymbals and trumpets of Heraclea. My servant came up to me, while I was cursing the rude hand that had disturbed me; and delivered me a letter, which was given him, as he said, by a lusty fresh-coloured young man in an embroidered coat, who promised to call upon me, two days hence, at the same hour. The dread of such another noise made me break open the letter with some precipitation.

· Mr.

' Mr. MYRTLE,

MY story in short is this. My father kept me under, after I came from school, and snubbed me confumedly, till I was five and twenty; and then he died, and left me three thousand per annum. I came to London this winter, where I am to be married to a fine young lady, when I can get her in the mind. But, I do onot know how, there is no pleafing of her. She hath made my heart ake so often, that I have refolved to follow somebody else; but • the hath fuch a way with her eyes, that I canonot do without her. When I first came to town, I heard she should fay, how that I was fo rough! Upon which I shaved every day, and washed my hands once in half an hour, for a week together. Being informed, that ' she hoped I might be polished in time, I got a broad French beaver, and an embroidered coat, that cost me threescore pound. I canonot indeed blame her for complaining that I have no taste, for I have lost my stomach; and I entirely agree with her that I want air, for I am almost choaked in this ' fmoaky town. But this is not all. hath given out, that she wishes I would f travel: and she told me no longer fince than · vester. Nº 17

mak

but that

· me

ther that

· how

'a pl

with

· He

fay that one

· you

' that

· Mr.

4144

'adv

wit!

· liev

6 hay

It meno with

follo

kept fnubenty; usand inter, lady, I do f her. that I ; but I canme to I was day, hour, , that I got idered I cang that y sto.

that I n this She would e than yester. vesterday, that the man she married should make the tour of Italy. Now, Sir, I would be at any expence, in building, to please her; but as for going into out-landish countries, I thank her for that. In fhort, she would have me out of the way. For, you must know, there is a little snipper-snapper from Oxford that is mightily in her books. I don't know how it comes to pass; but though he hath but a plain grey fuit, he hath fuch a fawning way with him, that my mind misgives me plaguily. 'He hath words at his fingers ends, and I can ' fay nothing but he has fome answer or another that puts me out; and yet he talks fo, that one cannot be angry neither. He always reads 'your Lovers to her; and I hear her fay often, that the should like such an ingenious man as 'Mr. MYRTLE. Now, what I defire is your 'advice; for, as I told you before, I cannot do without her. I am a hearty fellow; and, be-'lieve me, if you do me any good, you shall have gloves, and dance at my wedding.

'Your humble fervant to command,

'TIMOTHY GUBBIN,

It falls out very luckily that I can recommend Mr. Gubbin to a person for his purpose, without further risquing my own repose. The following letter, which I received a week ago, fhall shall serve for an answer to his. And I surther declare, that I constitute the author thereof my Esquire, according to the prayer of his petition. I have accordingly assigned him an apartment in the Lover's Lodge; and shall surther encourage him, as I find his merits answerable to his pretensions.

LAUNCELOT BAYS to MARMADUKE MYRTLE.

AS you are a professor and patron of Love,

· Courteous Knight,

I throw myself at your seet, to beg a boon of you. When I have told you my story, you will consets that I am the most amorous and chaste of swains. I am, Sir, by protession, an author, and the scene of my labours is a garret. My genius leads me to Love, and I have a gentle manner. When I have occasion for money, I fancy to myself a lady, and write such soft things, as you would bless yourself to hear. But living at present in the city, where such ware setches but little, I shall, without your assistance, fall shortly into My request is, that I may be transplanted from this barren soil into Covent-garden. My great poverty of imagination. Would you believe it, Sir? I have lived this month on a posie for a ring.

qui

Nº 1

wa in

dru

' me

cie

f ma

' my ill a p

col tac

and har

and tha

any foc

fex fro

' var

N° 17. urther of my tition. tment er en-

RTLE.

Love, con of y, you is and on, an and I occa-y, and bless in the

ttle, I

y into

d you

lanted My

vanity.

greatest ambition is to be received in the quality of Esquire to to courteous a knight as vou are; to carry your pen in this your gentle warfare, and do the fquirely offices established You may not 'in this order of chivalry. perhaps find me unqualified to take some drudgeries off your hands, which you must otherwise undergo; and may possibly appoint 'me fub-tutor to the British savages, before they approach the fair. It is thought fufficient that the taylor and dancing master have managed an awkward boy at his first coming to town: nay, upon the flrength of a box of fine myrtle Barcelona, a young fellow, now-adays, fets up for Love and Gallantry. 'ill fuccess of such unformed cavaliers makes 'a person of my talents necessary in a civilized country. You know, the ladies will be attacked in form, before they liften to terms; ' and though they do not absolutely infift upon hanging or drowning, they think it but decent that fuch attempts be made in rhyme and sonnet. I believe you will agree with me, that no woman of spirit thinks a man hath any respect for her, untill he hath played the 'fool in her service; and the mean opinion that fex hath of a poet makes any thing in metre, from a lover, an agreeable facrifice to their

· Now,

Now, fince there are few heads turned both for dress and politeness, fince witty sayings · feldom break out from two rows of fine teeth. and true spelling is not often the work of a pretty hand: I propose, for the good of my country, to fet up a toy-shop of written baubles, and poetical trinkets. The perfumes of flattery, the cordials of vows, the falts of wit, and the washes of panegyrick, are ranged in due order, and placed in proper receptacles, to be retailed out at reasonable prices. Here the fpark may be furnished with satyrical Iashes, when he has lost his clouded cane. Here he may purchase points, conceits, and repartees, as useful against an enemy as the nicest pushes ' his fencing-mafter can teach him. The most graceful bow, he can learn, shall be still improved by a compliment I can put in his mouth; and, to fay no more, his periwig shall, by my means, be the least valuable thing upon his shoulders.

No generous Lover will repine at my good fortune, when he hears that I get a warm coat by that which gains him the embraces of a bride. While he feasts all his senses, I shall content myself with the luxury of some meat, and much drink. Thus, an equal distribution will be made of worldly pleasures. As they become undoubtedly happy, I shall grow undoubtedly

dou dun

Nº 17

• 7

to a brir

for iflan

five

nar

tion

wit

' lash

fat.

' tee

for the

add

'Gle

' col

Vº 17.

both

yings

eeth.

of a f my ritten

umes

ts of

nged

icles,

Here

rical

Here

rtees,

ushes

most

l im-

n his

shall,

upon

good

coat

of a

fhall

neat,

ution

they

un-

tedly

doubtedly fat; hearts will be at rest, and dunns be paid.

'to advertise; which will not fail, I hope, to bring customers, and may lay a foundation for the Commerce of Love in this trading island.

'Love-letters and Sonnets, by the quire, at five guineas the profe, and ten the verse; with allowance to those that buy quantities.

A fet of Rhymes ready paired for any ordinary amour; never used but twice.

'The Art of Pleasing; or, Rules for Defama-'tion; with a compleat index.

'An Apology for the Colour of a Lady's Hair; with a word or two in defence of White Eye'lashes.

'A Treatise for, and another against, growing fat. Sharp sayings against faults which peo-'ple cannot help; with answers to each.

'A Compliment for a Masque, and a Repartee for a Rival. Neither ever spoken before.

'An Invective against embroidered Coats, for 'the use of younger brothers; to which is 'added an Appendix concerning Fringed' Gloves.

'A List of the Heathen Goddesses, with the colour of their hair and eyes; for the assistance of young gentlemen, that were never at the university.

Double Entendres, and Feeling Language, collected from the works of the most celebrated poetesses of the age.

Vows for young Virgins, to be fold by number; and Flattery for old Maids by weight.

Raptures, Transports, and Exclamations, at a crown a dozen.

f Turtles, Fountains, Grottoes, Forests, Roses,

'Tigresles, Rocks, and Nightingales, at com" mon prices."

 This day is published, "The Ladies Tales," exemplified in the Virtues and Vices of the Quality. Printed for Fred, Burleigh in Amen-Corner, price bound 28. 6d:

 To all my honoured Masters and Ladies; This is to give you timely notice, that on the last Wednesday in April will be my Feast Day, and there will be very good entertainment on that day, and all the year after. On that day I give challenge to ride or leap a horse, run on foot, or hallow with any woman in England, seven younger, but not a day older, because I won't undervalue myself. From my Lady Buttersield, living at Wansted in Essex, a mile on the other side of the Green Man. Post Boy, March 23—25, 1714.

 Yesterday the Right Hon. the Countes of Bridgwater, a daughter of the Duke of Marlborough, died of the small-pox, near the 27th year of her age. Ibidem, March 20-23.

Tuesday,

N° 1

Nº 18

I

P

neve Hort felve by t pofetures with exce word a di mak

as ar

ably

part while the uage,

cele.

Nº 17.

ver at

d by

ns, at

com.

r Fred.

s is to ril will nent on enge to man in won't

Paft

water,

day,

Nº 18. Tuesday, April 6, 1714.

te themed worth

Parva leves capiunt animos.

OVID.

T WAS the other night in the box of the gallery at Sir Courtly Nice, a Comedy I never miss for the sake of the Knight himself, HOTHEAD, and TESTIMONY, all parts in themfelves very diverting and excellently performed by the actors. Sir Courtly's character exposes to an extravagance those shallow creatures, whose imaginations are wholly taken up with form and outfide, and labour only at an excellence in indifferent things. To utter the words "Your humble fervant," and bow with a different air each time they are repeated, makes up his whole part in as pleasant a scene as any of the comedy. This puts me a-musing upon the force of being able to act fashionably in ordinary occasions, and filling up their part of the room with a tolerable good air, while there is nothing paffing which engages the attention of the affembly or company to any . one one other point. It is monstrous to observe how few amongst us are able to do it, till half their life is paffed away, and then at last they rather get over it as a thing they neglect, than behave themselves in it as a thing they have ever This matter is no where fo conspicuous as in an affembly of men of parts, when they are got together upon any great point, as at the College of Physicians, the Royal Society, or any other place where you have had an opportunity of feeing a good-many English gentlemen together. I have been mightily at a loss whether this proceeds from a too great respect for themselves, or too great deference to others; but it feems to be partly one, partly the other. Whatever the cause is, I have often feen the effect to a very great degree of pleasantry. You shall, in the instant a man is going to speak, see him stunt himself, and not rife within three inches of his natural height, but lean on one fide, as if taken with a fudden sciatica; and it is ten to one whether he recovers, without danger of falling quite down with shifting legs; and I have known it, when a very ingenious gentleman has tried both his legs, almost to tripping himself up, and then catched at himself with his arms in the air, turned pale, and finding by this time all his speech stared out of his head by a set of illnatured

Nº 18 natur down life. tried, canne fpeak instar as m veye gafp air-p enjoy vided orato mifc ward reco fuch equa utter you capa plac actio

their

beco

truth

their

men

18. ferve half they than ever conparts. great Royal have many been om a great partly e is, I legree man , and atural with ether quite vn it, both , and n the ne all of ill-

itured

natured curs that rejoiced in his confusion, fat down in a filence not to be broken during his life. There is no man knows, till he has tried, how prodigious tall he himself is: he cannot be let into this till he has attempted to fpeak in publick; when he first does it, in an instant, from fitting to standing up, the air is as much too fine for him, as if he had been conveyed to the top of the Alps. You see him gasp, heave, and struggle, like an animal in an air-pump, till he falls down into his feat, but enjoys his health well enough ever after, provided he can hold his tongue. If the intended orator stand upon the floor, I have seen him miscarry by taking only too large a step forward, and then, in the air of a beggar, who is recommending himself with a lame leg, speak fuch bold truths, as have had an effect just equal to the affurance with which they were uttered. A too great regard for doing what you are about with a good grace deftroys your capacity of doing it at all; but, if men would place their ambition first upon the virtue of the action, and attempt things only because it is their duty to attempt them, grace of action and becoming behaviour would naturally attend truth of heart and honesty of defign; but, when their imaginations are bent only upon recommending themselves, or imposing upon others, K 2 there to the

Nº 18

than

6 him

up.

upon

utterl

gener

knew

clama

preffe

ness, j

man t

circur

thing

you c

the Re

they

fpeak

their

to do

meeti

firm c

indeed

ridicu

their lay bl

cumft

ordina

there is no wonder, that they are seized with such aukward derelictions in the midst of their vanity or salshood. I remember when I was a young fellow, there was a young man of quality that became an accomplished orator in one day*. The circumstance was this: a gentleman, who had chastised a russian for an insolence towards a kinswoman of his †, was attacked with outrageous language in that assembly; when his friend's name was ill-treated from man to man, this ingenuous youth discovered the utmost pain

* The young man of quality here alluded to was unquestionably DANIEL FINCH, eldest son to Daniel Earl of Nottingham, who was elected one of the knights of the shire for the county of Rutland in the ninth of Queen Anne, and ferved for the fame county in all-parliaments whilst he continued a commoner. See STEELE's fine letter to him, prefixed to " The Roman Ec-" clefiastical History of late years; printed with notes among "STEELE's Letters, in 2 Vols. 1787." That letter is dated about a month after the publication of this paper; and there, and in a note, the curious may fee a circumstantial relation of the incident in the life of this nobleman here hinted at, and humoroufly difguifed. It is fufficient to observe here, that it is a compliment paid by STERLE to Lord Finch, for speaking in his favour, when he was expelled the House of Commons for the publication of the "Criss." This nobleman was unfortunately thut out at the close of the debate, and by this accident prevented from voting, which could have been of no fervice to STEELE.

† The ruffian, who had used the kinswoman of Lord Finch with insolence, was the author of the "Examiner," who, in No 44, Vol. III. (April 24, 1713), has some gross reflections on Lady Charlotte Finch, daughter to Daniel Earl of Nottingham, afterwards Duchess of Somerset. See Mr. Addison's "Whig Ex"aminer."

to

to those that fat near him, and having more with their vas a ality ay*. who rards outn his man, pain estiongham, county or the moner. an Ecamong dated there, related at, that it 0 18.

for the mately at previce to the with N° 44, afterg Ex-

to

than once faid, 'I am fure I could fight for 'him, why can't I speak for him?' at last stood up. The eyes of the whole company were upon him, and though he appeared to have utterly forgot what he rose up to speak, yet the generous motive, which the whole company knew he acted upon, procured him fuch an acclamation of voices to hear him, that he expressed himself with a magnanimity and clearness, proceeding from the integrity of his heart, that made his very adversaries receive him as a man they wished their friend. I mention this circumstance to shew, that the best way to do a thing as you ought, is to do it only because This thing happened foon after you ought. the Restoration; and I remember a sett of fellows, they called the new converts, were the chief speakers. It is true, they always spoke against their conscience; but, having been longer used to do fo in publick (as all are gifted at their meetings), they excelled all other proflitutes in firm countenances and stiff bodies. They were indeed ridiculous, but they could bear to be ridiculous, and carried their points by having their consciences seared, while that of others lay bleeding; but I am got into chat upon circumstances of a higher nature than those of ordinary life, compliment, and ceremony. I K 3 was abu

Nº i

" fe

mou

toge I wa

difc

fired

and

or t

at la

turn

thou

endi

and

me

entr

tong

as n

My

and,

crie

you

to c hane

you

difti

all t

the

to c

was speaking of Sir Courtly's, 'Your humble fervant, madam.'

As for my part, I always approve rather those who make the most of a little understanding, and carry that as far as they can, than those who will not condescend to be perfect, if I may fo speak, in the under parts of their character. Mrs. Page faid very justly of me one day (for. you must know, I am as mute as a fish in her presence), if Mr. MYRTLE cannot speak for Love, and his mistress cannot speak out of decency, their affair must end as it began, only in dumb show. I have a coufin at the univerfity, who lately made me a vifit; I know him to want no learning, wit, or fense, if he would please to dispense it to us by retail. He can make an oration, or write a poem, but won't let us have any thing of his in small parcels. He is come indeed to bear our raillying him upon it without being furly. I asked him, if he should talk with a man who had a whole language except the conjunctions copulative, how would he be able to understand him? Small matters it is absolutely necessary to capacitate ourselves for: great occasions do not occur every moment. The Jew faid very prettily, in defence of his frequent superstitious washings, and the like outward services, "I do these be-" cause I have not always opportunities to mani-" fest

2

fince

Nº 18. umble those nding, those I may racter. (for, in her k for ut of , only niverim to would le can won't arcels. It is a him m, if whole ative, Small citate occur y, in hings, ie benani-

fest

" fest my devotion in acts of virtue." I had abundance to do to make my coufin open his mouth at all. He and I, one evening, had fate together three hours without uttering a fyllable. I was resolved to say nothing till he began the discourse, but, finding the filence endless, I defired him to go down with me from my Lodge. and walk with me in the piazza. We took two or three turns there in the dark in utter filence; at last said I to him, Cousin Tom, this taciturnity of thine, confidering the fense I know thou hast in thee, is a vexation I can no longer endure with patience; we are now in the dark, and I cannot see how you do it: but here give me your hand, let me, while I hold you here, entreat you to exercise the use of your lips and tongue, and oblige me fo far as to utter, with as much vehemence as you can, the word coach. My youth took my friendship as I intended it, and, as well as he could in a laughing voice, he cried c-o-a-c-b. Very well coufin, fays I, try if you can speak it at once; with which he began to cry coach, coach, pulling himself out of my hand. No, fays I, coufin, you shall not go till you are perfect; with that he called loudly and distinctly, infomuch that we had in an instant all the coaches from WILL's and Tom's about the portico or little piazza. The fellows began to call names, as thinking themselves abused, fince no one came to take coach: upon which one cried out, What rafcals are those in the piazza? You scoundrels, said I, what are you good for but to keep your horses and selves in exercise? would you stare and stand idle at coffee-house doors all night? I went on with great fluency, in the language those charioteers usually meet with; upon which they came down armed with whips, and my coufin complaining his fword was borrowed of another college, and would not draw, wondered I would bring myfelf and him into fuch a scrape: he had not done speaking before a whip-lash took him on the cheek; upon which my young gentleman fnatched my cane out of my hand, and found every limb about him as well as his tongue. I stood by him with all my might, and would fain have brought it to that, that my cousin might be carried before a justice, by way of exercise in different circumstances, rather than go on the infipid, dull, useless thing which an unmanly bashfulness had made him: but he improved daily after this adventure of the coachmen, and can be rough and civil as properly and with as good an air as any gentleman in town. In a word, his actions are genteel, manly, and voluntary, which he owes to the confidence into which I at first betrayed him, by the filly adventure I have now related.

K 4

Thursday,

Nº 19

Nº 19

appo fidera

bund who whor

for time

kir vic

to ad

which n the you ves in

Nº 18.

lle at with oteers

down aining and g my-

d not m on eman found e. I would coufin ay of than ch an

oachperly

an in anly, dence

filly

ſday,

Nº 19. Thursday, April 8, 1714.

-quid deceat, non videt ullus amans.

OVID.

I SHALL be mightily in arrear with my correspondents, if I do not, for some time, appoint one day in the week to take into consideration their epistles.

The first that falls into my hands, out of a bundle before me, is from an unhappy man who is fallen in Love, but knows not with whom. Take his case from his own epistle.

Mr. MYRTLE,

April 3, 1714.

'I AM a young gentleman of a moderate fortune, have spent the greatest part of my time for these two or three years last past in what they call seeing the town, but am now resolved to marry, and forsake that unsettled kind of life. My thoughts are at present divided between two sisters; and as they are both amiable, I cannot as yet determine which to make my addresses to, but must beg your advice in this critical posture of affairs. Lystein and has sense enough, is very handsome, and good-humour ravish my soul, and it is then I resolve with myself to fix my thoughts on her alone; but, when Lucinda approaches, all my refolutions vanish, and I am Celia's no · longer. I have endeavoured to fearch into my own thoughts as nicely as poffible, and have at last discovered that it is Lucindal f admire, but CELIA I love. I would therefore conc)

N

Nº 19.

that

and my a

of h

' my

acce

Th

in mi

LING,

equal and a

the e comp

were two t

has r while expe effect tion effect

LINC

beg your advice which I ought to chuse, her, stible, , and re obis not retty:

Nº 19

com-

m; it

; fhe

nable,

ccom-

s, yet of her whole he iner at that ation, use of with and hen I n her s, all

's no into , and NDA efore her, that that by the delicacy of her face and shape, and stateliness of her mien and air, enforces my adoration; or her that by the agreeableness of her good humour and conversation engages 'my love? An answer to this will be very 'acceptable to your humble fervant, CHARLES DOUBT.

The circumstance of this gentleman puts me in mind of a paper of verses in Sir John Suck-LING, upon two fifters, whose beauties were fo equal and fo like, that they distracted the choice and approbation of their beholders. the eyes of their admirers were taken up in comparing their feveral beauties, their hearts were fafe by being unresolved on whom of the two to fix. That witty author on this occasion concludes,

He fure is happiest that has hopes of either, Next him is he that fees them both together.

My correspondent has not told me, that he has not easy access to both his young ladies; while he enjoys that, I cannot but propose the expedient of feeing them both together, as an effectual method towards coming to determination in this case, though it had the contrary effect in the case of the fisters reported by Suck-LING. If my correspondent has stated the mat-

Nº 1

col

· her

· Al

· a c

his

of fer.

· fol

· yo

the the

piec

who

wor

thi:

wł

· we ho at

th:

fer

to 'to · fu

· hi

for beauty palls by intimate conversation, but good humour and affability gain new strength the more frequently they discover themselves. I expect this correspondent, provided he goes into my method, should give me an account how he finds himself, that I may note it in my book of receipts.

The next gentleman, I find, is extremely high in his fever, for he starts from one thing to another in the present hurry of his spirits, and makes it impossible for me to give any regular judgement of his condition. I find he is but lately fallen into it, and I must observe his future letters very attentively, before I can be able to prescribe any thing for his recovery. It is the nature of his disease, in the first place, that the patients think every man delighted with their ravings. The style of the letter seems to me to be that which the learned in Love distinguish by the sublime unintelligible; but take it from himself.

Ob! Mr. MYRTLE,

'Had you seen her for whom my breast pants this moment, your ANNE PAGE had been as utterly no more as CLEOPATRA who ruined

· Anthony, or Statira who captivated ALEX-ANDER! heedless man that I was but what could

Nº 1g.

N° 19.
NDA;
but ength felves.
e goes count

emely thing pirits, any

I can overy. place, ghted feems Love

pants en as uined LEXwhat

could

could wisdom have availed me after seeing her! as she is fair, she is also inexorable. Alas! that what moves passion should also be a check to our desires; and how miserable is his fate, who conceives despair from the merit of what inspires his admiration! Oh, dear sir! send me your advice; but I am sure I cannot follow it; and I shall not have time to shew you how much I am your humble servant, though I know I shall be yours till death,

'CINTHIO LANGUISSANTE.'

I shall end to-day's work with this notable piece of complaint from poor TIM. GUBBIN, whose lamentation you must take in his own words.

Mr. MYRTLE,

'SINCE I writ to you last, I have visited this gentlewoman that I told you of, and whom I cannot be without every day in the week, except Sundays. You cannot imagine how very proud she is, and scornful, though at the same time she knows I am better born than herself; but she loves none but dissemblers. The young spark, who I complained to you was so much in her savour, told her such a parcel of lies the other day, that I told him to his face I wondered he was not assumed on

' Your most humble servant,

TIMOTHY GUBBIN.

a groat, and all for this proud minx. I am, Sir,

* This day is published, " The Romish Ecclesiastical History of late years." LOVER in folio, No 19.

Saturday,

Nº

fore

taini

I dan

matt

let t

a pla

incid

felf e

Iapp

1 crir

'and

· If t

' tify

^{*} In a few days will be published, " The Shepherd's "Week, in Six Pastorals," adorned with cuts, defigned and engraved by the best hands. Written by Mr. John Gay.

what to be a jest make ar at you quefan I, that I

herey my
e. I don't has as e way
, if I

to die what good worth n, Sir,

BIN.'
epherd's ical Hif-

urday,

Nº 20. Saturday, April 10, 1714.

She dropt a tear; and, fighing, feem'd to fay, Young maidens marry; marry while you may. FLATMAN:

I AM apt to believe the circumstances of the following letter are unfeigned, and therefore shall not labour to make them more entertaining by fabulous ornaments. I shall have, I dare say, enough to do in the progress of the matter, to shew my skill in Love; therefore let the following letter lie before the town, as a plain narrative of what, I fear, will have more incidents in it than it should have, were I my-felf either the son or the father in the narration. I appeal to the tea-tables on the matter.

Dear Mr. MYRTLE,

'I HAVE long had a fecret (and I hope no criminal) ambition to appear in your writings, and an equal defire to be under your direction. If therefore you have kindness enough to gratify the vanity of an enamoured female (who has

Nº 20

OA e

e moi

A was s eon

* of t " virt

"alar

tend whe

don

amb

is th

6 but

& you twen

5 was

5 well

f ence

& felf

mar

CAR

fam

tho

S CA

'hou

my

Soful

fin g

'Mif

has a mind to be admired in coffee-houses. and is willing to believe, that by a little of your management she may make a tolerable figure among your Lovers), and to convince the world that you are refolved to be as good as your word, by your readiness to give your fage advice to those who need it, and humbly fue for it; I earnestly entreat you to print me off to-morrow, and at the same time to publish your opinion of the following case: for the gentleman, who next myfelf is most concerned in it, has perused the letter I now prefume to fend you, and has positively declared he will stand to your determination. Mr. CARELESS is a gentleman of the Middle-Temple: he was fent thither very young to fludy the law. He has a vivacity in all his words and actions, which has acquired him the esteem and good graces of a great many of our fex. This kind of happiness made him entirely neglect the chief defign which brought him up to London. Coke upon Littleton grew mouldy and dusty in his solitary study, while he shined among the ladies in his coat turned up with velvet, and negligently graced with oil and powder. He better knew how to write a billet-doux than to engross a bill, and he was much more expert in repeating fcraps of plays, than in wording a petition.

A certain art he has, of faying the most common things after an extraordinary manner. was of very great use to him in effectually res commending him to those ladies, who are fond of that kind of innocent mirth which keeps virtue always in danger, and confequently ralarmed, and not in a stupid security which tends neither to virtue or vice. But, alas! where am I going?-I alk ten thousand pardons, dear Mr. MyRTLE, for this long pre-*amble. What I am going to confult you in is this. I am a young woman who have been but fourteen these three years past (though to you I may venture to own, that I was fix and twenty then A day of May laft). My father was an officer in the army, and though pretty well finicken in years, yet no man was a greater f encourager of mirth and diversion than himfelf: this turn of humour in the good old man made him extremely pleased with Mr. CARELESS; and unless the bufiness of his family required his more ferious attention, he thought his hours paffed flowly on, if young CAR ELESS happened to be absent from our This gentleman's close intimacy with my father gave him frequent opportunities of of being in my company; and he has often in gaiety of heart called me his MARIA, his Mistress, his Charmers and has told me a f thousand L ood

fes,

e of

ble

nce

and to ime

ase:

nost

de-

dle-

his him any

him

ght

idy,

coat

how

bill, ion.

6 A

Chociand

thousand times over he was in love with me, in a way which goes for no more than 'Madam, I like your company.' However, Mr. MYRTLE, you, who feem no ftranger to the weaknesses incident to our sex, cannot but imagine that a fingle woman, and no professed enemy to matrimony, was not displeased at fuch-like declarations from a pretty fellow, that was young, lively, brisk, and did not want wit. Though he was thus agreeable, and I neither insensible of his perfections, nor displeased at his addresses to me, yet my modesty laid too great a restriction on me, to e permit me to discover to him at first the secret fatisfaction I took in hearing him praise me, and how I was delighted when I liftened to the declaration of his paffion. What he f prattled at last began to dwell upon me; I grew afraid that all his professions of this nature were mere amusements to him, till one evening, when we were all very merry in the parlour dancing country dances, and playing plays, he faid somewhat to me in secret, which I fear I shall all my life wish I had This gentleman's clote ibranding sidT called 'Servants and Mistresses,' when, among the variety of gentlemen which were given me to chuse out of, I pitched upon Mr.

CARE-

Nº 20 CAR

to m

whice

the c grace falute

figh,

'tingle

'Mr.

' ladies

tenan ugly,

have

at my

was i

knee,

that n

'not, t

ments

came

I thou

20.

ne,

Ia-

Mr.

the

but

ffed

at ow,

not

ble,

nor

my

, to

cret

" most

me, d to hè e; I naone the ying cret, had play nong riven Mr.

ARE-

CARELESS as a gentleman the most agreeable to my fancy of any in the company. which he rose up, made me a very modest and respectful bow; and when, according to the custom of the play, he had given a very graceful, and methought fomewhat awful falute, he wispered me, and wished, with a figh, that he might be so happy as to be my choice in earnest .--- I hear the words still tingle in my ear. I ftole my eye towards 'Mr. CARELESS the whole night after; and if he happened to compliment any of the 'ladies, I took particular notice of her countenance, I could not help thinking her very ugly, and that she did not at all deserve to have any thing faid in her praise: if he smiled at my coufin, who was tolerably handsome, I was ready to cry; and when, in a fondling manner, he took my fifter SALLY on his knee, methought my poor heart grew as heavy 'as lead. Well! certainly my inquietudes all that night are not, and to Mr. MYRTLE need not, to be described .- But, Mr. MYRTLE, to make fhort of my flory, by mutual endearments and a reciprocal defire to please, Mr. CARELESS and I, from that time forward, became lovely and agreeable in each other's eyes. I thought myself happy in his company, and a fight of him never failed to fill me with the most ravishing delight. He would often difcourse to me of marriage, and long till he was of age that he might have me all his own. I conversed with him as with the man who was to have been my companion for life. I feldom dreffed but on the day I expected a visit from him. Thus we lived and loved. for fome months, till the malicious world talked of our behaviour, and made Mr. CARELESS's father acquainted with our whole proceedings. He fends for his fon. Oh Mr. ' Myrtle! how shall I describe my concern for ' his departure! I dreaded his father's power over him, and trembled when I confidered that his father, who was able to leave him a good fortune, might possibly awe him into a e neglect of me. Mr. CARELESS leaves me and London, in obedience to his father's command. As foon as he got home, he fent me word, his father feverely menaced him, and fwore foe lemnly he would not leave him a groat if he continued to love me, or entertained the least thought of making me his wife.

In Mr. Careless's absence my father and mother both die; and I survived them, an orphan of a very slender fortune; Mr. Care-me know, that his father perfifts in his reso· lution; however, he affures me, that, if I pleased, please to the had a that if should of ma

Nº 20.

fortun argum man, After

by inc

'pruder 'rather 'fame o 'I writ never advises which

and co

followed dom, to be r

Mr. has att

for, an

20,

if-

he

n.

ho

I

a

ed.

rld

Ar.

ole

Ar.

for wer

red

n a

o a

and nd.

his

fo-

he

east

and

an

RE-

lets

efo-

if I

fed,

Nº 20. pleased, he would post to London unknown to the old man, and there marry me. I now had a difficult card to play. I reasoned thus: that if I took Mr. CARELESS at his word, I flould thereby prove the unhappy instrument of making him guilty of disobedience, and, by incurring his father's displeasure, put his fortune in danger. I thought it would be no argument of my affection to involve the young man, I pretended to love, in these dangers. After some struggle, my passion gave way to prudence; and I resolved to lose my Lover, rather than take him at the expence of his fame or discretion. After I had wept heartily, I writ him a letter in the style of one who had never loved. I told him, I believed it most adviseable to lay aside the thoughts of a match which was attended with many difficulties, and could not but prove a very difadvantageous one to him, and, if his father remained irreconcileable, to me too. Mr. CARELESS followed my advice; he commended my freedom, ceased to be my Lover, but continued to be my friend ever fince.

'Mr. CARELESS is now at age, unmarried, has attained to a plentiful fortune without the assistance of his father: I am still unprovided for, and confess Mr. CARELESS is this moment as much master of my heart as ever.

L 3

Dear Mr. MYRTLE, be speedy in your deter-e mination, and fay what you think should be

Mr. Careless's sentiments towards me. I wait with impatience for to-morrow's Paper, which is feriously to determine the fate of your con-fant reader,

PRUDENCE LOVESICK.

It is a very hazardous point to determine a matter attended with fuch nice circumstances; but, supposing the facts are honestly stated, if the father of CARELESS has any taste of merit. he ought to give his confent to a lady to whom he owes fo generous a refusal of his son, rather than be his daughter, when it was incommodious to the circumstances of his family; if an accession of wealth is thrown in, which ought to be accounted as a portion fent by Providence to take off all prudential objections that flood between the young lady and her happiness, I won't fay what the fon should do; but if the father does his duty, it will have the same good effect on the Lovers. Till that is refused, I shall not play the casuist in a case wherein no one can err, but with a guilt which cannot but be obvious to any man who has the least sense of humanity.

Tuesday,

Nº 20.

N° 21

110030

IN he admitted of a per the con

'letter 'ing t

thoughthan to count

other You

'write,

the fa

20:

er-

be vait ich

on-

CK.

e a

ces;

, if

rit,

om.

her odi-

an ght

nce

ood

, I

the

ood

, I

no

but

enfe

lay,

age of eventy-nine, from I am Hilloarmaid bot I am fitte I flouid have been a woman

N° 21. Tuesday, April 13, 1714. mooded as poy svin Him I , and and Him mail Natio Comceda eft ____ Juv.

he has laveral eiter abildion. Si IN hopes that people will trouble me no more with accounts of the CRABTREES*, I have admitted the following letter, though I am fick of a people so eminently made the objects of the contrary passion to that of Love.

SIR,

I READ in your Paper, the other day, the 'letter of RICHARDETTO LANGUENTI, concern-'ing the ridiculous and mischievous race of the CRABTREES. I must confess, I never 'thought words better put together or applied, than mischievous and ridiculous, for that unac-'countable, lamentable, detestable, and every other word ending in able, under tolerable. You may fee, fir, by the hand in which I write, that I am a woman; and by the flyle 'and paffion, that I am an angry woman; at 'the fame time I don't know whether I may write myfelf woman, only because I am of the age of twenty-nine, fince I am still a maid; but I am sure I should have been a woman before now, if it had not been for this disagreeable, I would say execrable race of the CRABTREES. As fast and as well as my passion will let me, I will give you an account of my sufferings.

* See LOVER, No 11. No 14, &c.

L 4

I am the daughter of a gentleman of 400 l. a year, who has several other children. Sir Anthony, always giving himself out for a great friend to the landed interest, as he calls it, has ever been in great credit with my father. To find portions, maintenance, and education, for a numerous family, my father has practifed that natural improvement of a country gentleman's estate, grazing cattle, and driving them to the market of London. He dealt for the whole with one eminent butcher in St.

James's Market, with whom he accompts once a year, and takes the payments which are made to the faid butcher in balance of their accompts. You must know, there is a great lady in that neighbourhood, eminent for her justice and charity, who uses Sir Anthony as her Steward: the Knight has got a great estate by oppressing her tenants, and terrifying all people in her fervice with his great power in her. The lady above-mentioned owed my father's correspondent, the butcher, a sum

of

in mare fon of had fo engage her in Sir An
the lac coin I
My fat offered
being to do poor b and wr dle wit

Nº 216

of mo

to flic project calls r land.

by this race of them;

of mis

ments. by bras

A:

1.

1;

in

f-ne

f-nt

1.

Sir

lls

a-

u-las try

ng for

St.

pts

of 9 2

for

NY

eat

ing

wer

um

of

of money, which was to have been my fortune in marriage with an agreeable young man, the fon of a neighbouring gentleman. My father had so great a respect for this lady, that he engaged himself to take any demands upon her in payment without the least fcruple. By Sir Anthony's management, a third part of the lady's debt to the butcher is paid in a coin I never heard of before, called tin tallies. My father has written to Sir ANTHONY, and offered them to ZACHARIAH his brother, they being out of my father's way to know what to do with; but ZACHARIAH has told the poor butcher, who carried my father's letter, and written to my father, that he cannot meddle with them; but has gravely advised him to flick to the landed interest, and not mind projects, for so the half-wited impudent wretch calls receiving money for the product of his land. Thus, fir, I have loft a good hufband by this trick of Sir Anthony, and the whole race of them wonder why our family curfes them; but, fir, it is the nature of the CRAB-TREEs to be blind to the evils they themselves commit, and do not think themselves guilty of mischiefs, wherein they are the original causes, except they are the immediate instruments. These gross abuses the graceless crew, by bragging of their power, have committed against.

e against all the world without being found out and thoroughly explained, till the devil, who owed them a shame, prompted them to meddle with those that could draw their pictures, I owned to you, in the beginning of this · letter, that I was an angry woman, and I think I have made it out that I have reason for it, I have nothing now left to divert my poor aking heart from reflection upon its difappointment, but gratifying my refentment against the infamous cause of it. When I reflect upon this race, especially the Knight himself, I confess my anger is immediately turned into mirth; for how is it possible that an ungainly creature, who has what he is writ in his face, should impose upon any body? He looks fo like a cheat, that he paffes upon people who do not know him from no other advantage in the world, but that they are ashamed to be governed by so filly an art as physiognomy. With this mischievous aspect there is something so aukward, so little, and briskly comic in Sir Anthony's mien and air, that one would think the contempt of his figure might fave people from the iniquity of his defigns; but Sir Anthony has the happiness next to a good reputation, which is to be insensible of shame, and therefore is as finug as he is ugly. Forgive me personal reNº 21

· flect

'kna fent

the.

wol · fibl

· Sir

at t

" WOI ' rath

Suc

· Kn

and

eve

who

· fuc poe

· abo

' ing

rep

· law is

'im

· act

· flections,

0 21.

out

who ned-

ures.

this

hink

r it.

poor

ifap-

ment

en I night

ately

that

ne is any

affes

m no

they

n art

vous

ittle,

n and

f his

ty of hap-

is to

is as

l re-

tions,

Nº 21. flections, but ugly is a woman's word for knavish. I observe, fir, you affect putting the fentence of fome poet, English or Latin, at the top of your Paper; and as I defire you would let my letter be as remarkable as poffible, I beg you to put these words out of 'Sir John Suckling's play of "The Sad One," 'at the head of this my writing, except you would put in all my letter, which I had much rather you would: the place in Sir John SUCKLING will agree well enough with the Knight; for though his name is ANTHONY, and Suckling has used the word Robin. every one of this country will think him meant when you do but fay "The Sad One," for ' fuch indeed he is. The paffage is thus. A ' poet and an actor are introduced discoursing 'about characters in a play. The actor is telling the author, that he wonders why he will represent what cannot be in nature, an honest 'lawyer: "Why," fays Muliticarni, (that 'is the name of the poet), "dost think it 'impossible for a lawyer to be honest?" the actor answers.

As 'tis for a Lord-treasurer to be poor,

Or for a king not to be cozened:

'There's little ROBIN, in debt within these three ' years,

Grown fat and full-

Nº 21

feren

to e

or a

poff

him:

as m

in it

Pref

very feen

mini

' land

from · Non

a ne 'piou

our who

of fc · I def

it we

for f

tion

RIAL

him

the

flory

but '

ber :

filly

As for using the word treasurer instead of Reward, there is nothing in that, for Sir An. THONY, in a fnearing way, calls himself so, and pretends he deserves that word more than any one else who ever served her, though it is well known he has disparaged her more than any one that ever ferved any body; and my father fays, fince he has got me and the tin tallies lying upon his hands, that he will fend you an account, wherein he will prove, that if • fhe had given him a year's income of all she has in the world to have nothing to fay to him, the had faved above a year's revenue by it. But there is no dealing with him; he has got all the country to call the honest man, who managed her bufiness before him *, 'all the names that malice could invent; fo that, whenever he is dismissed, he knows he cannot be worse used than the best men have been before him. Thus Sir Anthony thinks himself secure against defamation; first, because he deserves all the ill that can be said of him; and, secondly, because the same thing has been faid of those who deserve all the f praise which language can bestow. I have a great deal more to fay of the ugly creature, but I had like to have forgot BRICKDUST and · ZACHARIAH. You must know they have dif-

* Lord Godolphin, the preceding Lord Treasurer.

ferent

· him

Nº 21.

21.

of

N-

ind

iny

vell

iny

fa-

tin

end it if

fhe

to

nue

m; nest

n *,

fo

he

ave

nks

be-

faid

ing

the

ve a

ure, and dif-

erent

ferent apartments about Sir Anthony's house, to examine every one who comes for money, or admit their accompts. These animals, if possible, are more hideous than Sir ANTHONY himself; they are both in town, and they are as much defired in the country as their arrival in it formerly was feared and dreaded. The Presbyterian ministers, in these parts, have a very pleasant tale of ZACHARIAH, who, it feems, was made a truftee in a donation for ministers diffenting from the Church of England; the description of ministers differting from the Church of England, fuits as well with Nonjurors as Diffenters; and ZACHARIAH being a new convert, forfooth, to the church, has a ' pious compassion rather for those who were of our church, and are gone higher, than to those 'who will not come up to it, and therefore, out of scruple of conscience, cheats the Dissenters. 'I defire you would be fure to print this, because it would be well that the truth were known; for some do not fail to say, that, under the notion of its being a gift to pious uses, ZACHA-RIAH has referved it for that good Christian himself. When ZACHARIAH went through the town of Worcester-but that is a long flory-I had like to have forgot BRICKDUST; but what fignifies talking of him?—I remember a whimfical faying of one speaking of a 'filly creature with a manly aspect; he called him a Cole-black filly fellow, fo I fay BRICK.

DUST is a foft ugly cur, he has a phiz fit only for accusation and abuse; if he designed to commend, it would have that effect; and it is nonsense for you to set up for a Lover, when you let these creatures go about to frighten women with child, and bear false witness against honest men. I fear I have said more than will come within your Paper, but pray do not leave any of it out, for my Lover was a very pretty fellow, and was forced to leave me because of these cursed tallies.

' I am, dear Mr. MYRTLE, very much your fervant,

SUSAN MATCHLESS.

Mr. MYRTLE,

I BEG the favour of you to acquaint the town, that, in the most necessary earthen-ware,

I have, with great pains and curiofity, wrought round the exterior superficies of them, the true effigies of Sir Anthony CRABTREE, Mr.

ZACHARIAH CRABTREE, and Mr. PETER

They will be fold at all potters' BRICKDUST.

flops within London and Westminster on the 19th instant, and country customers may have them at a cheaper rate.

erried a

RUBENS CLAYWRIGHT. bolled ed ; fooleyland a dier pu Thurfday, did no that I cafes, The a whim prefen

· AS untro pear

a ger the a purfu

to the fo fan

' lady

21.

knly
to

er,

to aid

out

ver

to

Nº 22. Thursday, April 22. 1714.

in the into an entrion of say abaily if Secretum iter-

Hor.

THE business of Love alters in every family in England; and I must confess I did not sufficiently weigh the great perplexity that I should fall into, from the vast variety of cases, when I undertook my present province. The author of the following letters is in very whimsical circumstances, which will be best represented by his epistles.

SiR,

'AS I am about thirty, and of such a round untroubled countenance as may make me appear not so much, I must complain to you of a general calamity that obstructs or suspends the advancement of the younger men in the pursuit of their fortune. I now make Love to the daughter of a man of business, who is so fantastical as to threaten to marry the young lady to a contemporary of his own, I mean one

3.'

the are, ght the

Mr.

the

нт.'

one of his own years. He fays, no young man can be good for any thing but filling an house full of children, without being wife enough to know how to provide for them. Now, as I am to fucceed in Love, as I can argue my father-in-law into an opinion of my ability for business, give me leave to think it not foreign to your defign, to print my thoughts concerning the prejudices which men in one stage of · life have to those in another. The utmost inconveniencies are owing to the difficulty we meet with in being admitted into the fociety of men in years, and adding thereby the early knowledge of men and bufiness to that of · books, for the reciprocal improvement of each other. One of fifty as naturally imagines the fame infufficiency in one of thirty, as he of thirty does in one of fifteen; and each age is thus left to instruct itself by the natural course of its own reflection and experience. I am apt to think that before thirty a man's natural and acquired parts are at that strength, as, with a little experience, to enable him (if ever he can be enabled) to acquit himself well in any bufiness or conversation he shall be admitted into. As to the objection, that those that have not been used to business are consequently unfit for it, it might have been made one time or other against all men that ever were · born;

Nº 22 bor.

at a

' that con

' hatl

' my

' men whie

fpen

'and

' Qui

' time

' peda

ciple educ

' prin

'the

' polit

' com

body

' rathe

in the go be

'know

' matte

ters F

a per

that make

2,

an le

gh

as

ny

gn

rnof

in-

we

arly

of

the

e of

je is ourse

am

tural

1, as,

ever

ell in

e ad-

those conse-

made

r-were born;

born; and is so general a one, that it is none at all. Besides, he that knew men the best that ever any one did, fays that "Wisdom cometh by opportunity of leifure, and he that ' hath little business shall become wise;" and my Lord Bacon observes, that those governments have been always the most happy which have been administered by such as have fpent part of their life in books and leifure, and inflances in the governments of Pius Quintus and Sixtus Quintus about his own 'time; who, though they were esteemed but ' pedantical friars, proceeded upon truer principles of state, than those who had had their 'education in affairs of state, and courts of princes. If this rule holds in the dispatch of the most perplexed matters, as of public politicks, it must of necessity in that of the common divisions of business, which every body knows are directed by form, and require rather diligence and honesty, than great ability 'in the execution.

'A good judgment will not only supply, but 'go beyond experience; for the latter is only a 'knowledge that directs us in the dispatch of 'matters future, from the consideration of matters past of the same nature; but the former is 'a perpetual and equal direction in every thing 'that can happen, and does not follow, but 'makes the precedent that guides the other.

M

" This

Nº 22

met

that

" the

and

· you bufi

thof

they

'adva

'The

not

· foure pofe

' want

in th

'thinl

'This

been '

'their

' dece

'upon

be tr

'those

' confe

' mark

'a bu

' rende

ing t

·I

'This everlasting prejudice of the old against the young heightens the natural disposition of youth to pleasure, when they find themselves adjudged incapable of bufiness. Those among them therefore whose circumstances and way of thinking will allow them fuch freedom, f plunge themselves in all sensual gratifications. Others of them, of a more regulated turn of thought, feek the entertainment of books and contemplation, and are buried in these plea-These pursuits, during our middle age, frengthen the love of retirement in the fober man, and make it necessary to the libertine. They gain philosophy enough by this time to be convinced it is their interest to have as little ambition as may be; and confidering rather how much less they need to live happily, than how much more, cannot conceive why they fhould trouble themselves about the raising a fortune, which in the pursuit must lessen their present enjoyment, and in the purchase cannot enlarge it.

I confess, the impious and impertinent way of life and conversation of youth in general exposes them to the just disesteem of their elders; but where the contrary is found s among any of them, it should be the more particular recommendation to their patronage. 'There are some observations, I have by chance · niet met with, fo much in favour of young men. that I cannot suppress them. As fincerity is the chief recommendation both in public and private matters, it is observed, that the voung are more fincere in the dispatch of bufiness, and professions of friendship, than those that are more advanced in years: for they either prefer public reputation to private 'advantage, or believe it the only way to it. They are generally well-natured, as having not been acquainted with much malice, or foured with disappointment; the less dis-' posed to pride or avarice, as they have neither wanted nor abounded. They are unpractifed in the ways of flattery and diffimulation, and think others practife it as little as themselves. 'This arises from their boldness, as having not been yet humbled by the chances of life, and their credulity, as having not yet been often ' deceived.

'I shall conclude by saying, it is very hard upon us young fellows, that we are not to be trusted in business and conversation with those in years, till due age, together with its consequences, ill health and ill-humour, have marked us with a faded cheek, a hollow eye, a busy ruminating forehead, and in short rendered us less capable of serving and pleasing them, than we were when we were thought

ves ong vay om,

22.

nft

of

ons.
of
and lea-

age, ober ine.

e to ittle ther

than they ng a

their nnot

way neral their ound more nage.

niet

unable to do either. I beg your pardon for

' fo many ferious reflections, and your leave to ' add to them a Love-letter to the father, inclosed in one to the daughter, and addressed to her for his perusal. I am, Sir,

' Your most humble servant,'

" MADAM,

'MY life is wrapped up in you. I dif-

' relish every conversation wherein there is not ' fome mention made of you; whenever you ' are named, I hear you commended; and that gives ease to the torment I am in, while I am

' forced to imother the warmth of my affection

' towards you. You know your father is not

' displeased that I love you; but I am, I know onot how, to prefer your interests to yourself.

But all the bufiness of the world is imper-

' tinence, and all its riches vexation, in com' parison of the joy there is in being understood,

' Madam, your most faithful,

' most devoted, humble servant.

· P. S. When your father asks whether I have writ, hide this, and show him the enclosed.

Look displeased, and he will plead for me.'

· MADAM,

Nº 22

·I beg

' reck

vour · He i

' not 1

to be his i

at yo

truft

'intru · I am

* * H Maittaire all the C indexes ; Watts, a correct ec the works drus, Sall there are and this c speed. L printing t of MAIT Let. to M 22.

for

to

in-

ffed

it.

dif-

not

you

that am

Lion

not rself.

per-

com-

tood,

ant.

· MADAM,

'I have a great respect for you, but must beg you would not take it amis, if I can reckon no woman a beauty whose father's favour does not add to her other qualifications. He is, as I am, a man of business; and I doubt not but he will acquaint you, that business is to be minded. Your declaration, joined with his in my favour, will make me more frequent at your house; but till I know what I have to trust to, I do not think it is proper for me to intrude upon your time, and lose my own. I am, madam,

' Your most humble fervant.'

 Her Majesty Q. Anne, having made a grant to Michael Maittaire, Gent. or to his Assigns, for printing and publishing all the Greek and Latin Authors in truelves, with compleat indexes; there are now published, by J. Tonson and John Watts, assigns of the said Michael Maittaire, very curious and correct editions in truelves, with copious and useful indexes to the works of the following Authors, Terentius, Lucretius, Phadrus, Sallustius, V. Paterculus, and Justinus, from T. Pompeius; there are several other authors in the press, and near finished; and this collection will be made compleat with all convenient speed. Lover, in folio. See the particular reason for reprinting this advertisement here, and a more particular account of MAITTAIRE, and this undertaking, in The Lover, No. 27, Let. to Mr. Severn.

have ofed.

e.'

DAM,

M 3

Saturday,

Nº 23. Saturday, April 17, 1714.

Quod latet Arcana non enarrabile fibra.

PERS.

Mr. MYRTLE,

WHEN you first erected your Lodge, you then took upon you to be a patron of Lovers, and at the same time promised your affistance to all those who should address themselves to you for advice, the better to conduct them through all those paths of Love, which, it is to be prefumed, you have often trod before them.

It is this confideration which emboldens me to give you the trouble of this, without offering at any formal apology for it. It is a mighty pleasure and a solid satisfaction to a man, to reflect that he has it in his power to · be ferviceable to others; and fince I am confident of your ability, if you deny me the benefit of it, I shall grudge you the possession of fuch an advantage, and value you no more, though a master in the art of Love, than I would a miser for his wealth, when he poorly referves.

and thin 3

refe

Nº 2

fou nee

feri

diti

or :

ver abl

who my flav

figh

' min

tim

dan min

· mii

'tim 'In

' my ' adn

fall,

f trous

° 23. Nº 23.

referves it to himself, and cannot find in his foul to bestow the least part of it on the most ' needy and indigent.

'That you may be the better able to prefcribe, I shall beg leave to lay my real condition before you without art or diffimulation. I am, in plain terms, what you call a Rover, or a general lover. I am of the most perverse, untoward, amorous constitution imaginable; I have scarcely ever seen that female who had not fome charm or other to catch my heart with; and I dare fay I have been a ' flave to more mistresses than swell the account of Cowley's ballad called "The Chronicle." I have frequently been loft in transports at the fight of a Chloe or a Sachariffa, and have ad-' mired many an ugly Corrinna for wit or hu-'mour. Myra has charmed me ten thousand times with her finging; and my heart has 'leaped for joy when Miss AIERY has been . dancing a jig, or Isabella has moved a ' minuet. It has burnt and crackled like charcoal at the flirt of a fan, and I have fome-'times fallen a facrifice to an hooped petticoat. 'In short, there is scarce a woman, I ever laid 'my eyes on, that I have not liked and loved, 'admired and wished for; the pretty, the wise, ' the witty, the gay, the proud, and the coquet, 'all, all from the fine lady down to the dex-

M 4

ERS.

dge, a panifed dress er to Love, often

s me offeris a to a er to conthe effion nore, han I

oorly erves.

trous MOLLY who waits with the kettle at my fister's tea-table, have made scars or wounds in my heart. And yet after all this-which is somewhat strange—my heart is as whole as ever-What I mean is this; that notwithflanding the multiplicity of darts which have been shot at me, yet they never made any · lasting impression on me, or have been able to throw me into an humour ferious enough to think of marriage. Though, I confess, the temper I am now complaining of, has been exceeding troublesome to me, yet I could not help thinking matrimony a cure worse than the disease. Beside, how shall I be certain I shall not be the same latitudinarian in ' love after I have swallowed the bitter dose? It is for this reason that I have long used my endeavours to find out some other remedy for my distemper: and to that end I have had recourse to all those famous physicians who have pretended to write for the good of those persons who have been in my whimfical circumstances.—But, alas! after a long and tedious confultation, among these mighty professors, I could not perceive myself one jot the better. I am convinced they are all a parcel of pretenders, and that I had no more reason to expect any benefit from them, than one afflicted with the gout has to hope for an infallible N° 23.

who

'thro

Gale

' fmo

own ftori

' and

obse

' laid ' Arte

was an a

gath

day,

him,

his h

'excl

Hei

Fron

nora

fince

· T

ficien

amo

·amo

my ands nich hole ith-

any le to ugh fefs,

has ould vorse cer-

in in ofe? I my

nedy have cians

d of ofical and

prot the arcel

one one

llible

fallible cure from your boafting fham doctors, who disperse their bills and advertisements through every street in London.

. The first I addressed myself to was that Galen in Love, Ovid. The fellow had a

'fmooth tongue, and really talked very prettily.

'He shewed me a great many soft letters of his own composing, told me some odd surprizing flories, made me figh at his mournful elegies,

'and promised me, that if I would carefully observe his rules, and follow those directions

'laid down in his "Philo-Dispensatory, or De

'Arte Amandi," I need not doubt but my bufiness was done. He delivered this with so serious

'an air, that filly I began to believe him, and gather hopes of a perfect recovery; till one day, when I was giving great attention to him, I heard him break off in the midst of his harangue, and immediately cry out in the

'exclamatory style,

Hei mibi! quod nuliis amor est medicabilis herbis!

'From that very moment I thought him an ig-'norant coxcomb, and never meddled with him

' fince.

'The next I ventured upon was good ABRA'HAM COWLEY: he was looked upon as a proficient in his way, and was very much in vogue among the ladies, for gently handling their hearts,

N° 23

' part

· hire

' that

now

·T goo

had tatio

'acq

infin

· ledg

Fro

der

wer

vert

we!

· 1

rep

all

' hid

to e

' var

'cha

'the

ome lmy ers,

reen and rew ved

23.

ons.

had

tron of

, or was was.

him neis,

hore very

after -But

beumfince

went ight,

etter erous

e my fome

parts

parts of her Lover's watch, and would have bought it from her: she told me she would hire the use out to me for a little time, but that she would not fell it outright.

The last I advised with was the most reonowned Isaac Bickerstaff, Efg; he was a person of great note and fashion; had very good practice in this city for some years: he 'had acquired a large flock of fame and reputation for his experience in the world, his 'acquaintance with all the little weakneffes and infirmities incident to human kind, and was more particularly had in esteem for his know-'ledge and proficiency in the occult sciences. From a gentleman thus qualified, what might 'I not have hoped for? but, Sir, I foon understood that all his predictions and prophecies were but dreams and fables to amuse and divert us, and that he understood himself very wellwhen he called himfelf TATLER.

'And now, Sir, after all these fruitless and 'repeated enquiries, my last and only refuge 'is in you. You are certainly acquainted with 'all the fecret springs of Love, and know the 'hidden causes which make my heart rise up 'to every fhe I meet. You cannot be ignorant 'how it comes to pass, that my temper is so 'various; and my inclination fo floating and 'changeable, that one object cannot confine 'them, but like a wandering bee they fly at

T

ward

taker

ture

ward

most

be th

innat

beau

gene

and I

are a gula

versa

care

it b

D

D

every flower. I affure you, Mr. MYRTLE, my present disposition is what gives me great concern and uneafinefs. Tell me how I may reclaim this volatile heart of mine, this defultory imagination, and keep it within bounds:

· flew me the way to fix it to one, or not love at all. I am not uneasy for your answer, for I must own to you I feel but very little pain; but in some distempers they say that it is an ill fign. I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

CHARLES LASIE.

My correspondent is come already to the condition he desires; for what is not confined to one, is not Love at all; and my friend CHARLES needs not further information in his case, but to be told, that he does not labour under the passion of Love, but the vice of wantonness.

Next week will be published, " Memoirs of the Lives, Intrigues, Amours, and Adventures, of the most famous Gameflers and Sharpers in the reigns of K. Charles II. K. James II. William III. and Q. Anne. Wherein is contained the Secret History of Gaming, and all the most sharping tricks and cheats used at Piquet, Gleek, Lantaloo, Bankafalet, Baffet, Primero, Cribbige, Hazard, Tricktrack, and all other English, French, Spanish, Dutch, or Italian games, played with Cards, Dice, or Tables. The whole calculated for the meridian of London, Bath, Tunbridge, and the Groom Porters, and may ferve for all other places, without any error at all. By Theophilus Lucas, Esq; Printed and sold for Ferd. Burleigh in Amen Corner, 12mo. This publication, though it ill answers the expectations raised by its catchpenny title-page, illustrates in many respects the useful Papers against Sharpers in The TATLER. See TAT. with Notes, Vol. I. and II. paffim.

Tuesday,

my con-

ids: love for [

s an ant,

conone, LES

Tion

Lives, samees II. Secret cheats mero, ench, ee, or or all oucas,

ed by afeful Notes,

day,

N° 24. Tuesday, April 20, 1714.

There dwelt the scorn of vice, and pity too.

WALLER.

TRUE virtue distinguishes itself by nothing more conspicuously than charity towards those who are so unhappy as to have taken a contrary course; it is in the very nature of virtue to rejoice in all new converts towards its interests, and bewail the loss of the most inconsiderable votaries. It would perhaps be thought a severity to make conclusions of the innate goodness of ladies at a visit by this rule; beauty, wit and virtue, in those conversations, generally receive all the diminution imaginable; and little faults, imperfections, and missortunes, are aggravated not without bitterness.

DICTYNNA, though she is commended for singular prudence and œconomy, appears in conversation never to have known what it is to be careful.

DECIA, who has no virtue, or any thing like it but the forbearance of vice, cannot endure the the applause of DICTYNNA. Ladies who are impatient of what is said to the advantage of others, do not consider that they lay themselves open to all people of discernment, who know that it is the want of good qualities in themselves which makes people impatient of the acknowledgment of them in others.

Among the many advantages which one fex has over the other, there is none so conspicuous, as, that the same of men grows rather more just and certain by examination; that of woman is almost irreparably lost by so much as a disadvantageous rumour. This case is so tender, that in order to the redress of it, it is more safe to try to dissuade the aspersers from their iniquity, than exhort the innocent to such a fortitude as to neglect their calumny.

It should, methinks, be a rule to suspect every one who infinuates any thing against the reputation of another, of the vice with which they charge their neighbour; for it is very unlikely it should flow from the love of virtue: the resentment of the virtuous towards those who are fallen, is that of pity, and that is best exerted in silence on the occasion. What then can be said to the numerous tales that pass to and from in this town, to the disparagement of those who have never offended their accusers? as for my part, I always wait with patience, and never doubt dou the repo it fl flow veri agai man quai grea I ha be gr

ing

ful fex un qu

age occ

of you

'are

doubt of hearing in a little time for a truth, the same guilt of any woman which I find she reports of another. It is, as I said, unnatural it should be otherwise; the calumny usually slows from an impatience of living under severity, and they report the sallies of others against the time of their own escape. How many women would be speechless, if their acquaintance were without saults. There is a great beauty in town very far gone in this vice. I have taken the liberty to write her the sollowing epistle by the penny-post.

' MADAM,

'I HAVE frequently had the honour of being in your company, and should have had a " great deal of delight in it, had you not pleafed to embitter that happiness by the unmerci-'ful treatment you gave all the rest of your 'fex. Several of those, I have heard you use 'unkindly, were my particular friends and ac-'quaintance. I can affure you, all the advant-'age you had above those you lessened on these 'occasions, was, that you were not absent, for 'the company longed for the fame opportunity 'of speaking as freely of you. Believe me, 'your own dress fits never the better on you, ' for tearing other people's cloaths. While you 'are rifling every one that falls in your way, "you cannot imagine how much that fury dif-· composes are of elves

em-

now

fex ous, nore man dif-

fafe iniforti-

eputhey ikely e re-

o are erted n be d fro who

r my never loubt

every thing in her person), and said, her for-fo agreeable, and therefore she retired to the we lady's circumstances (fince you had disallowed 'roor f tune

Nº 2

tut

ten

the

OTh

"us

(was · had · wo cou

trac

· you

'you

thin

con

' dan

· best fhe!

· mo

the:

and and

'you

' you

'mon

'had

'.You

follo

Wh

U 28 nt b a a. he ld ie, ne, nd le, nfine aid hat to r I ep. g in ou, ies, that vhat iced the

wed

fortune

Nº 24. tune would make up for all, for the had now ten thousand pounds, and would, if her brother died, have almost two thousand a year. This too you knew the contrary of, and gave sus to understand the utmost of her fortune was four thousand, and the brother's estate had a very heavy mortgage, and when cleared would not be a neat thousand a year. Your cousin, when you took so much pains to contradict her mifrepresentations, grew grave with 'you, and told you, fince you were fo positive, you were the only one in town who did not think Mrs. DULCETT, besides her being a confiderable fortune, a woman of wit, that 'danced gracefully, fang charmingly, has the best mien, the prettiest manner in every thing ' she did, that she had the least affectation, the 'most merit, was-Upon which you, with the utmost impatience, after ruffling your fan. 'and riggling in your feat, as if you had heard 'your mother abused, rose up, and declaring 'you did not expect to be allowed one word 'more in the conversation, fince your coufin 'had once got the discourse, left the room. 'Your coulin held the lady of the house from 'following you out, and instead of the anger 'we thought her in when you were in the 'room, fell into the most violent laughter. 'When she came to herself, she prevented what N we were going to fay on the occasion, by telling us, there was no fuch creature in nature as Mrs. Dulcert, that she had laid this plot against you for some days, and was resolved to expose you for that scandalous humour of yours, of allowing nobody to have any tolerable good qualities but yourself: you see, faid she, how suddenly she made objections, from the fort of character I gave the woman, affigning the proper imperfection to the quality in her according to my commendation. I think we faid all together, what, no fuch woman in the world! what, faid the · lady of the house, she to be so particular in the estate mortgaged, and all those dislikes to one she never saw, to one not in being, to one you had invented!--you may eafily imagine what raillery passed on the occasion, and how you were used after such a demon-ftration of your censoriousness.

I defire whenever hereafter you have the evil spirit upon you to lessen any body you hear commended, to think of Mrs. Dulcett:

if you do not, you may affure yourfelf, you will be told of her; among your acquaintance, whenever any one is spoken ill of, Mrs.

DULCETT is the word, and no one minds what you fay after you have been thus detected. I 'advise you to go out of town this season, go · into cou just favor the il detect let ev felf w fhe b ing w be no

The respector

pofiti

T

t

d

f

S,

n,

le

a-

10 ne

in

es

to

ly

n,

n-

he

ou r:

rs.

I

go

nto

'into a milk diet, and when you return with country innocence in your blood, I will do justice to your good humour, and am,
'Madam.

Your most obedient, humble servant, MARMADUKE MYRTLE.

The painful manner women usually receive favourable accounts of one another, shows that the ill nature in which this young woman was detected is not an uncommon infirmity. But let every woman know, she cannot add to herfelf what she takes from another; but all that she bestows upon another will, by the discerning world, be restored ten-fold; and there can be no better rule or description of a right disposition than this,

There dwelt the fcorn of vice, and pity too.

The fcorn of it, in virtuous persons, is in respect to themselves, the pity in regard to others.

N 2

out has a vin adi ...

: alukitu *

and the Land and the same of the

Thursday,

now nerly that deb dien early Thursday, April 22, 1714.

Quid non mortalia pectora cogis- VIRG.

To Mr. MYRTLE.

tall . SIR. The nonmonut as ton ti

I every woman know T Suppose that you begin to repent you published my last letter to you, since your late indulgence to me occasions this frequent trouble. I don't know, Sir, what it may be to you, but I am fure it is real pleasure to me, to embrace all opportunities of shewing myself your humble fervant; therefore give me leave to talk before fo great a master of Love, and to use the trite fimile of making a declaration of war before Hannibal.

' AMONG all those passions, to which the frailty and weakness of man subject him, there ' is not any that extends fuch a boundless and despotic empire over the whole species, as that of Love. The meek, the mild, and the humble, are strangers to envy, anger, and ambition; Nº 2

· biti · leri

· bee · Th

· mo

· fan

" nef

f tret

the wo!

and

' mo

floc

con

·]

diff enje

'all

" met

'plif

' par his

ver

fo : Oth

tow

fif t

arm f mu

G.

ıb-

ate

le.

out

ace

m-

be-

the

be-

the

ere

and

as

the

m-

n;

bition; but neither the malicious, the choleric, or the proud, can fay their hearts have been always free from the power of love.
This has subdued the exalted minds of the most aspiring tyrants, and has melted the most fanguine complexion into an effeminate softness. An undaunted hero has been known to tremble when he approached the fair; and the mighty Hercules let fall his club at a woman's feet. The scholar, the statesman, and the soldier, have all been Lovers; and the most ignorant swain has neglected both his flocks and pipe, to wooe DAPHNE or SYLVIA.

But though Love be a passion which is thus common to all, yet how widely do its votaries differ in their manner of address! The pleasing enjoyment of the admired object is what they 'all pursue; and yet few agree in the same 'methods of obtaining their ends, or accom-'plishing their desires. Every Lover has his ' particular whim, and each resolves to follow 'his own way. Some fancy money has a fo-'vereign charm in it, and that no rhetorick is ' so irrefistibly prevailing as a golden shower. Others think to take their mistresses as they do 'towns, by bombarding or undermining them; if they cannot beat them down by force of 'arms, they will try to blow them up with false musick. Some attempt to frighten their mi-N 3 " ftreffes

N° 25

it be

6 herf

perf

be a

duce

f part

abou

to b then

fore

wha

for t enqu

fure!

road

' poif

" male

don'

' tion

an u fince

nau

tion!

be f

the !

' poli

thou

' cien

fresses into a compliance, and threaten to hang or drown themselves, if they refuse to pity them. Others turn tragedians, and exe pect to move compassion by a falling tear, or a rifing figh. Some depend upon drefs, and conclude that, if they can catch the eye, they will foon feize the heart. One man affects gravity, and anther levity, because some women prefer the folemnity of a Spaniard to the gaiety of a Frenchman. An handsome leg has found the way to a widow's bed; and a coquette has been won by a fong or a caper. A prude may be caught by a precise look and a demure behaviour; and a platonic lady has lain with her humble fervant out of a refined friendship, when she would not listen to a declaration of Love. Some will be attacked in mood and figure; and others will have it, that a great scholar will never make a kind husband. The witty Clara is delighted with impertinence; and a celebrated toast has languished for the beautiful outside of a painted butterfly. Some women are allured by the refemblance of their own follies; and I have feen a rake, by the help of a whining accent, triumph over a sanctified Quaker.

But of all the arts which have been practifed by the men on the other fex, I have not observed any kind of address which has been fo generally successful as flattery. Whether

it

25.

to

to

ex-

or nd

ley

cts

vo-

he da

er.

dy

re-

to

it,

nd

ith

an-

ted

re-

ive

nt,

ac-

105 en

er

it be, that, by making a woman in Love with herself, you thereby engage her to love the person who makes her so; as who would not be apt to be fond of the cause which produces fo agreeable an effect? or whether the partiality and felf-love, which most women ' abound in, does the more readily induce them to believe, that all the praise which is given them is really due to their merit, and therefore they admire you for your justice? or 'whatever other reason may possibly be assigned for this weakness, I shall not now go about to enquire; but so it is, that the shortest and ' furest way to a woman's heart is through the 'road of skilful flattery. This, like a subtle 'poison, infinuates itself almost into every fe-' male, and a dose of it rightly prepared seldom fails to produce an extraordinary opera-Like a delicious cordial, it meets with 'an universal acceptance and approbation, while ' fincerity and plain-dealing are looked upon as 'nauseous and disgustful physick. In opposi-'tion to what I here advance, it may perhaps ' be faid, we may love the treason, and yet hate 'the traitor. How true this maxim may be in ' politicks (treachery being a moral evil, which, ' though of use to us for our safety, is yet suffi-'cient to beget an aversion in us towards the N 4 " wretch wretch who is guilty of it) I shall not dispute; but I am fure in Love affairs it will scarcely hold. For the must be a woman of uncommon virtues and qualifications, who can fo nicely distinguish between the gift and the giver, as to refuse the one, and yet receive the other. They do not think flattery a vice, and therefore cannot be persuaded to dislike a Lover for being a courtier; nay, though they are conscious of some of their own imperfections, yet if their admirers are not quickfighted enough to difcern them, they are willing to impute their blindness to their love; nay, though some defects are grossly visible even to the Lover, yet if he will compliment his mistress with what she really wants, I dare ' appeal to the whole fex, whether either fuch incense or the offerer of it be one jot nearer the lofing their favour, and whether they are onot ever delighted with both the delufion and the deceiver. But if they really believe them-· felves as amiable as the flatterer tells them they are, then, in point of gratitude, they conclude themselves obliged to think kindly of their benefactor; that he is one, none can deny, fince the greatest kindness you can confer on a mistress are praise and commendation. These are those melting sounds, that soft mufick which never founds harshly in a woman's ear. Nº 25.

ear.

flate a · M

' man

tune.

f prett

' fung

4 vanta

ficien

had a

of a

as fh

than her f

' that

' plaus

· M

'good

' profe

f that rob t belon

' mod

' guilt

beau

hear

falsh

f mist

fargu

25.

te:

ely

m-

fo

the

ive

ce,

e a

hey

ec-

ckill-

ve;

ble

ent lare

uch

arer

are and

emnem

hey

dly

can

onion.

mu-

an's ear, ear. Before I conclude this Paper, I shall relate a story which I know to be fact.

· Miss Wirwou'd was a young gentlewoman of good extraction and an handsome fortune. She was exactly shaped, and very pretty: the dreffed and danced genteelly, and fung fweetly: but notwithstanding these advantages (which one would imagine were fufficient to make any one woman fatisfied), she had an insufferable itch after the reputation of a wit. She fancied she had as much wit as fhe wanted (though indeed fhe wanted more than ever the will have); and this conceit made her fond of scribbling and shewing her follies that way, as taking great delight in ap-blaufe.

' My friend MEANWELL is a gentleman of good fense and a found judgement: he is a professed enemy to flattery, and is of opinion. that to commend without just grounds, is to 'rob the meritorious of that which only of right belongs to them. He fays, a compliment is a 'modify lye, and declares he would not be guilty of so much baseness as to cry up a beautiful fool for a wit, not even in her own hearing, though he were fure to have his falshood rewarded by the enjoyment of his mistress. Undeserved applause is to him an fargument of either want of judgement or of ' infincerity.

infincerity, and he refolves he will never go about to establish another's reputation at the expence of his own. With these honest use-· less qualities he has made long but fruitless courtship to young Miss WITWOU'D. NED COURTLY is a new but violent pretender to the fame lady. NED is a shallow well-dressed coxcomb: he was bred at court, and is of a graceful and confident behaviour, tempered with civility. The shallow thing can wait at a distance, and look at her, and with a smile approach her, and fay, Your Ladyship is divinely pretty.' He is wonderful happy also in particular discoveries; and whenever he renews a vifit to his mistress, she is sure of being presented with some additional charm, which would have for ever lain concealed, had not NED most luckily found it out. NED quickly e perceived Miss Wirwoup's weak side, and carefully watched all opportunities of making his advantage of it. Mifs grows enamoured of NED's company, and begins to despite MEANWELL as an unpolished clown. She likes NED as the does her glass, and for the fame reason, that it always shows her her beauties; and fhe takes as much pleasure in hearing him, injudiciously as he does it, give her also the beauties of her mind, as she does to fee the glass reflect those of her body. One evening,

eve

Nº 25

hor awa

6 wh

· leif god to ord.

wit

fpe

· NE

the lad ho

f ter

f tha

GR

s tha

in · wa wo

s ma

s nat

. vei

Nº 25. I am, Sir, your most humble servant, all the cood beat of the 25.

go

the

uselefs

LED

r to

ffed

of a

ered

it at mile

D is

alfo

re-

eing nich

not

ckly

and

king

ired

pife

She

the

her

e in

give does One

ing,

evening, last week, MEANWELL had the honour to fup with her; the cloth being taken away, fhe delivered him a copy of verses. which, she said, had been the product of her leifure hours, and defired the opinion of fo good a judge. My friend had the patience to read them twice over, finds nothing extraordinary in them, fo fmilingly returns them with a filent bow. He was just going to fpeak his mind impartially, when in came 'NED COURTLY. He perused and hummed them over in a feeming rapture, looked at the lady and then at the paper for almost half an hour in full admiration-and then with a better air than ever critick spoke, he pronounced that the author of those verses had Con-GREVE's wit, and WALLER's foftness, and that there was nothing fo compleatly perfect in all their works.—The confquence of this was-MEANWELL was discarded, because he would be rigidly honest in trifles; and NED made his mistress his wife, because, in spite of nature, he allowed her a poetess, or, perhaps; very justly, because he really thinks her so.

· VESUVIUS.

the most engagent of nervice. If he was soo Saturday. regised cools and that salismail our ch, the triefy that been the preduct of their Nº 26. Saturday, April 24, 1714.

or Tind of twenty is all the Durum; sed levius fit patientia Quicquid corrigere oft nefas. Hor.

SIR,

T FIND you are an author who are more I inclined to give your advice in cases which raise mirth in your readers, than in those which are of a more serious and melancholy s nature. But you know very well, that in virtuous Love there are many unhappy accidents which may lay a claim to your compassion, s and consequently to your affistance. I myself am one of those distressed persons, who may come in for my share of your concern. About eight years ago I married a young woman of great merit, who was every way qualified for a bosom friend, that is, for advancing the inonocent pleasures of life, and alleviating its misfortunes. She had all the good fense I ever met with in any male acquaintance, with all that sweetness of temper which is peculiar to the most engaging of her sex. Life was too , usbreday, · happy · hap

· mu! awa

" mon

this very

of c

to ' geth.

in (

thus fron

nati

boo my.

· I ha ' had

volu " Of

" to 1

" ISA 47

exp gun

it is this 'I ft

paff as t

lor.

ore

nich

hofe

noly

vir-

ents

ion,

felf

may

out

n of

for

in-its

ever

all a

r to

too

PPY

happy with fuch a companion in it; for I must tell you with tears, that she was snatched away from me by a fever about twelve months fince. I was the more unable to bear this unspeakable loss, as having conversed with very few besides herself during the whole time of our marriage. We were the whole world to one another, and whilst we lived together, though scarce either of us were ever in company, we were never alone. thus cut off from the fociety of others, and from the person who was most dear to me, I naturally betook myself to the reading of such books as might tend to my relief under this. 'my great calamity; after many others which 'I have perused upon this occasion, I lately had the good fortune to meet with a little volume of sermons, just published, intituled, "Of Contentment, Patience, and Refignation "to the Will of God, in feveral Sermons, by "ISAAC BARROW, D.D."

'The duty of contentment is so admirably explained, recommended, and enforced by arguments drawn from reason and religion, that it is impossible to read what he has said on this subject without being the better for it. I shall beg leave to transcribe two or three passages which more immediately affected me, as they came home to my own condition.

" The

....

goo

" my

. 66

" life

a tru

" fee

« fri

" it,

" ufe

" in

" fer

" do

" ki

" no

à ing

" far

" cil

" no

" all

er no

" ot

" fu

e re

a th

« re

« w

" CO

ee no

The death of friends doth, it may be, opof press thee with forrow. But canst thou lose thy best friend? canst thou lose the presence, the conversation, the protection, the advice, " the fuccour of God? is he not immortal, is the not immutable, is he not inseparable from thee? canst thou be destitute of friends, whilst " he stands by thee? is it not an affront, an heinous indignity to him, to behave thyself as " if thy happiness, thy welfare, thy comfort, had dependance on any other but him? is it not a great fault to be unwilling to part with any thing, when he calleth for it? neither is it a of loss of thy friend, but a separation for a small time; he is only parted from thee, as taking a little journey, or going for a small time to " repose; within a while we shall be fure to " meet again, and joyfully to congratulate, if we are fit, in a better place, and more happy se state; pramisimus, non amisimus; we have sent " him thither before, not quite loft him from c us.

"Thy friend, if he be a good man (and in fuch friendships only, we can have a true fatisfaction) is himself in no bad condition, and doth not want thee; thou canst not therefore reasonably grieve for him; and to grieve only for thyself, is perverse selfishness and fondness."

· What

26.

op-

ofe

ce,

ce,

15 om

ilft

an

as

had

not

any

it a

nall

ing

to

to

ppy

lent

om

d in rue

ion,

not

d to

ness

hat.

What follows runs on in the same vein of good sense, though it is a consolation which I myself cannot make use of.

"But thou hast lost a great comfort of the "life, and advantage to thy affairs here? is it "truly fo? is it indeed an irreparable lofs, even " feeluding the confideration of God, whose " friendship repaireth all possible loss? what is " it, I pray, that was pleafant, convenient, or " useful to thee in thy friend, which may not "in good measure be supplied here? was it a " fense of hearty good-will, was it a sweet free-"dom of conversation, was it sound advice, or "kind affiftance in thy affairs? and mayft thou " not find those which are alike able, and will-"ing, to minister those benefits? may not the " fame means, which knit him to thee, con-" ciliate others also to be thy friends? he did " not alone furely possess all the good-nature. " all the fidelity, all the wisdom, in the world, " nor hath carried them all away with him? "other friends therefore thou mayst find to. "fupply his room; all good men will be. " ready, if thou art good, to be thy friends: " they will heartily love thee, they will be " ready to chear thee with their fweet and "wholesome society, to yield thee their best "counsel and help upon any occasion. Is it " not therefore a fond and unaccountable affec-" tion stion to a kind of personality, orather/than want of a real convenience, that disturbeth thee?

"In fine, the same reasons which in any other loss may comfort us, should do it also in this; "neither a friend, not any other good thing, we can enjoy under any security of not soon loss ing it: our welfare is not annexed to one man, no more than to any other inferior thing; this is the condition of all good things here, to be transfent and separable from us, and accordingly we should be affected to wards them.

" Fragile fractum oft, mortale mortuum eft."

Give me leave to cite also out of this great author a very agreeable story which is taken from Julian's Epistles, and which perhaps pleases me the more, as it is applicable to my own case.

"When once a great king did excessively and obstinately grieve for the death of his wife, whom he tenderly loved, a philosopher observing it, told him that he was ready to comfort him, by restoring her to life, supposing only that he would supply what was needful towards the performing it. The king faid, he was ready to furnish him with any thing. The philosopher answered that he was provided

"

"

66

**

"

**

**

..

"

"

h fl tl

is n

6.

n

h er

s;

ve

of-

ne

or gs

15,

·o eat

ten

aps

my

ely. his

her

y to

up-

was ing

any was

ided

or provided with all things necessary except one "thing: what that was the king demanded; " he replied, that if he would upon his wife's " tomb inscribe the names of three persons who "never, mourned, she presently would revive. "The king, after enquiry, told the philoso-" pher that he could not find one fuch man. "Why then, O absurdest of all men (said the " philosopher smiling) art thou not ashamed " to moan as if thou hadft alone fallen in-"to fo grievous a case; when as thou " canst not find one person that ever was free " from fuch domestic affliction. So might "the naming one person, exempted from in-" conveniences like to those we undergo, be " fafely proposed to us as a certain cure of " ours; but if we find the condition impossible, "then is the generality of the case a sufficient "ground of content to us; then may we, as "the wife poet adviseth, solace our own evils " by the evils of others."

'I have observed, Sir, in your Writings many hints and observations upon the most com-'mon subjects, which appeared new to me; I 'should therefore beg of you to turn your ' thoughts upon that melancholy accident which 'is the occasion of this letter. If you can give ' me any additional motives of comfort, I shall receive

receive them as a very great piece of charity; and I believe you may oblige many others who are under the same kind of affliction, as well as, Sir, your most humble servant,

' R. B.

N

ver

a l

tho

has

but

_ligh

the pass

the VER

whi

club

clare

ing

he w

This gentleman has too favourable an opinion of me, if he thinks me capable of adding any thing material to what has been handled by the excellent author whom he has mentioned in his That learned man always exhaufts his fubjects, and leaves nothing for those who come He was not only a great divine, after him. but was perfectly well acquainted with all the ancient writers of morality, whose thoughts he has every where digested into his writings; and, at the same time, had a most inexhaustible fund of observation and good sense in him-He has scarce a fermon that might not be spun out into a hundred modish discourses from the pulpit; for which reason I am very glad to find, that we are likely to have a new edition of his works.

Tuesday,

^{*} Lady TYRREL is dead at her feat near Oxford, being 136 years of age. Dawkes's News-Letter, May 1, 17 4.

^{*} His Ex ellency MATTHEW PRIOR, Esq; being recalled, General Ross will set out very speedily for the court of France. Ibidem.

as

6.

y; ers

B.'

any the his

his ome ine, the s he gs;

uftimnot

arfes very

new

being called, France.

sday,

N° 27. Tuesday, April 27, 1714.

Ingenuas didicisse fideliter Artes Emollit mores—

OVID.

MONG the many letters of correfpondents, I have of late received but very few which are not mixed with fatire. I am a little tired with fuch ideas as the reading those performances raise in the mind; so are those who imagine they are alluded to by what has paffed through my hands, and I doubt not but my readers in general cease also to be delighted with that kind of reflection. therefore it is irksome to us all, it is time to pass to more pleasing arguments. But as I told the town at my first setting out, that Mr. SE-VERN was my favourite of all the characters which I have represented to compose our little club mentioned in my first Paper, I shall declare myself further on this subject, by printing my letter I have writ to Mr. Severn, which he will receive to morrow morning.

0 2

· To

61

1

· W

· fa

f th

· re

· fe

f th

of · lea

wł

gr

of .

· mo

'and

nat

car

'the

' To Mr. SEVERN.

SIR,

'THIS comes with a fett of Latin authors iust now published by Tonson. You see they are in twelves, and fit to be carried on occasion in the pocket. He sent me two fetts, one for myfelf, the other for the gentleman whom I meant by Mr. Severn. You will please therefore to accept the present he makes you. You need not be enjoined to be partial to them as they are a gift; for, as you will observe, Mr. MAITTAIRE has had the care of the edition; you need not be further encouraged to recommend them to your friends and acquaintance. The learned world ' is very much obliged to that gentleman for his useful labours; and his elegant addresses (to those to whom he dedicates the book, as well as) to the readers in general, show him a perfect master in what he undertakes, for he introduces his authors in a style as pure as ' their own. You know he had the good fortune to live in the favour, and, as it were, under the patronage of the famous Dr. Bus-By, to whose great talents and knowledge in the genius of men we owe very great ornaments of this age, and the fupply of men of · letters 27.

OTS fee ried two itle-You t he o be you the rther your world an for reffes ok, as him a for he ure as d forwere, r. Busedge in at ornamen of letters letters and capacity for many generations, or rather classes of remarkable men during his long and eminent life. I must confess (and I have often reflected upon it), that I am of opinion Busby's genius for education had as great an effect upon the age he lived in, as that of any ancient philosopher, without excepting one, had upon his contemporaries. Though I do not perceive that admirable man is remembered by them, at least not recorded by them, with half the veneration he deferves: 'I have known great numbers of his scholars, 'and am confident, I could discover a stranger who had been fuch, with a very little conver-' fation: those of great parts, who have paffed 'through his instruction, have such a peculiar ' readiness of fancy and delicacy of taste, as is 'feldom found in men educated elsewhere, 'though of equal talents; and those who were of flower capacities have an arrogance (for ' learning without genius always produces that) which fets them much above greater merit that grew under any other gardener. He had a power of raising what the lad had in him to the ut-'most height in what nature defigned him; and it was not his fault, but the effect of nature, that there were no indifferent people came out of his hands; but his scholars were the finest gentlemen, or the greatest pedants,

Nº

"t

· g

· II

· al f tl

o th ir

13

6 01

· b fi

6 CC

· W

to

of

fo fo

fo fo

in in en en

'ju

f th

' th

are

· Mr.

ca:

in the age. The foil which he manured al. ways grew fertile; but it is not in the planter to make flowers of weeds; but, whatever it was, under Busby's eye, it was fure to get forward towards the use for which nature defigned it.

converse.

But I forgot what I fate down to write upon, which was to hand to you these pretty volumes of Terence, Sallust, Phædrus, Lucretius, Velleius Paterculus, and Justin: but, it will be faid, how comes this matter to have at all a place in the LOVER? Why very properly; for to you, whose chief art in recommending yourself is to act and speak like a man of virtue and fense, that which contributes to make you wifer and better is ferviceable to you, as you are a Gentleman and a Lover. Take my word for it, the oftener you take these books in your hand, you will find your mind the more prepared for doing the most ordinary things with a good grace and spirit; that is, the agreeable thoughts of these writers frequently employing your imagination, will naturally and infenfibly affect your words and actions. It will, in a greater degree, do what good company does to all who frequent it, make you in vour air and mien like those with whom you anter er it get

e de-

• 27.

retty Lubut,
have

ke a con-

pro-

the and, pared the a ployd in-. It

ou in

Mr.

'Mr. MAITTAIRE has promised to go thro' the best remaining authors with the same diligence: the large indexes, which lead with fo much ease to any beautiful passage one has a mind for, are of great use and pleasure. They are made with fo much judgement and care, that they ferve the purpose of an abbreviation of the book, and carry a fecret instruction, in that they lay the sense of the author still closer 'in words of his own, or as good as his own. I am mighty well content with the province of being esteemed but a publisher, if I can be fo happy as to quicken the paffage of use-'ful arts in the world; and I wish this Paper's coming, where otherwise works of this kind 'would not be spoken of, may be of any use to a man who deferves so well of all lovers of learning as Mr. MAITTAIRE. Perhaps a 'fond mother may, by my means, lighten her ' fon's fatchel, and get him these little volumes 'instead of the heavy load the boy was before encumbered with; and her own eyes may 'judge, that this is a print which cannot hurt

'the child's.
'But I must leave these ancients, and give a 'cast of my office to a living writer, a fister of
'the quill.

The fentiments and inclinations of my mind are so naturally turned to Love, that it is with

Nº 2

Nº

· ft gl

W:

· pa

h:

· lo g g

fa

fi

f m

'di

· d

'n

a great deal of pleasure I frequent the play. house, where I have often an opportunity of feeing this passion represented in all its differ. ent shapes. I have for some years been fo constant a customer to the theatre, that I have got most of our celebrated plays by heart; for which reason it is with more than ordinary pleasure that I hear the actors give out a new one. It is no small satisfaction to me, that I know we are to be entertained to-' night with a comedy from the same hand that writ The Gamester and The Busy Body. The deferved fuccess these plays met with is a certain demonstration that wit alone is more than fufficient to fupply all the rules of art. The incidents in both those pieces are fo dexterously managed, and the plots fo ingeniously perplexed, as shew them at once to be the invention of a wit and a woman. The curious will observe the same happy conduct in the entertainment of this night; and ' as we have but one British lady * who employs her genius for the drama, it would be a shame-'ful reflection on the polite of both fexes, ' should she want any encouragement the town can give her. I defire your interest in her behalf; and am, Sir, your most obedient servant, ' MARMADUKE MYRTLE.'

This was Mrs. CENTLIVEE. The new Comedy here al-

Thursday,

olayy of fferbeen at I

0 27,

by than give n to tothat ody. with

e is ules

eces s fo once

nan. conand

loys me-

xes, nwc

bent, LE.

e al-

lay,

Thursday, April 29, 1714. Nº 28.

-Nibil invitæ triftis custodia prodest : Quam peccare pudet, Cynthia, tuta fat eft.

PROPERT.

Y Correspondents shall do my business M for me to-day.

Mr. MYRTLE,

' I THROW this letter from two pair of fairs, with half a crown with it, in an old glove, in hopes he that takes it up (for I am watching till a porter, or some such body, 'passes by) will carry it to your LODGE. I have none to complain to but yourfelf. 'locked up, for fear of making my escape to a 'gentleman, whose addresses I received by my ' father's approbation, though now his preten-' sions are disallowed for the sake of a richer 'man. I have no help in this miserable con-'dition, nor means to relieve myself, but by ' defiring you to print the inclosed in your very 'next Lover. The gentleman who is to marry

Nº

£6 !

66

16

66

66

"

66

66

66 66

22

66

66

"

66

$6

66

16

me has visited me twice or thrice alone; and ' indeed I fee fuch infallible marks of the most unfeigned and respectful passion towards me, that it is with great anguish I write to him in the fincereity of my heart, which I know will be a fincere affliction to him. It is no matter for a direction by his hame: he reads your Paper, and will too foon gather that the circumstances of my letter can concern only himfelf.

"SIR.

Had sasboo "IT is a very ill return which I make to the " respect you have for me, when I acknow-" ledge to you, that, though the day for our " marriage is appointed, I am incapable of lov-"ing you: you may have observed, in the " long conversations we have had at those times "that we were lately left together, that fome " fecret hung upon my mind: I was obliged to " an ambiguous behaviour, and durst not re-" veal myself further, because my mother, " from a closet near the place where we fate, " could both hear and fee our conversation. " I have firict commands from both my parents " to receive you, and am undone for ever, ex-" cept you will be so kind and generous as to " refuse me. Consider, Sir, the misery of be-" flowing yourself upon one who can have no " prospect and most me, m in will atter your cir-him-10 28.

o the nowour lovthe imes her, fate, tion. ents exas to bee no pect '

re-

" prospect of happiness but from your death. "This is a confession made perhaps with an " offensive fincerity; but that conduct is much " to be preferred to a covert dislike, which " could not but pall all the sweets of life, by " imposing on you a companion that doats and " languishes for another. I will not go so far " as to fay, my passion for the gentleman, whose " wife I am by promise, would lead me to any " thing criminal against your honour; I know "it is dreadful enough to a man of your fense " to expect nothing but forced civilities in re-" turn for tender endearments, and cold esteem " for undeferved Love. If you will on this "occasion let reason take place of passion, I "doubt not but fate has in store for you some worthier object of your affection, in recom-" pence of your goodness to the only woman " that could be infenfible of your merit.

" I am, Sir,

"Your most humble servant,

" M. H."

' Mr. MYRTLE,

'I AM a young woman perfectly at my own biberty, two and twenty, in the height and affluence of good health, good fortune, and good humour; but, I know not how, I must acknow-

house.

Nº

6 h

f t

· t

acknowledge there is fomething folitary and distrest in the very natural condition of our fex, till we have wholly rejected all thoughts of marriage, or made our choice. The man has not yet appeared to these eyes, whom I could like for a husband. I therefore apply myself to you, to let the town know there is, one many furlongs from your Lodge, one that lives with too much ease, and is undone for want of that acceptable kind of uneafiness, the importunity of Lovers. If you can fend me ' half a dozen, I promise to take him who addreffes me with most gallantry and wit, and to yield to one of them within fix months after their first declaration that they are my fervants; but at the same time I expect them to fight one another for me, and promise to be particularly civil to him who first has his arm in a scarf for my sake. I expect that they turn their fury and skill towards disarming, or flightly wounding, not killing, one another; for I shall not take it for respect to me to lessen the number of my flaves; at the fame time, the conquered is to beg, and the victor is to give life for my fake only. You must know, Sir, I value more being envied by women, than loved by men; and there is nothing proclaims a beauty fo effectually, as an interview of her Lovers behind Montaguehouse. In hopes of a serenade soon after the publication of this letter, I rest in dull tranquillity,

Your most affectionate humble servant,

CLIDAMIRA.

Mr. MYRTLE,

28.

and

our

ghts

man

n I

is,

hat

the

me

ad-

and

ths

my

em

to

his hat

rm-

no-

to

the

the

ou

ried

e is

as ue-

ise.

YOU must know I am one of those coxcombs who know myself to be abused, but have not resolution enough to resent it as I ought: to tell you plainly, I am a kind keeper, and know myself to be the most fervile of cuckolds, for I am wronged by a wo-'man whom I may part with when I please, but am afraid that when I please will never happen. As other people write verses and fonnets to deplore the cruelty of their mistress. I could think of nothing better this morning than diverting myself, and soothing my folly by the example of men of wit, who have formerly been in my condition. I was glad to meet an epigram of a gentleman I suppose your worship is acquainted with, that hit my condition; and make you a present of it, as I have improved and translated it in the janty flyle " of a man of wit and pleasure about 'the town." Pray allow me to call her my dear for pe

0 ye

fer vii

fer

ha

hi

bo

cei

wl

ma

ha

be

tha

for the rhyme fake; for I never writ verses till she vexed me:

De infamia suæ puellæ.

Rumor ait crebro nostram peccare puellam; Nunc ego me surdis auribus esse velim. Crimina non hæc sunt nostro sine fasta dolore: Quid miserum torques, rumor acerbe? tace.

The town reports the falshood of my dear, To which I cry Oh that I could not hear! I love her still; peace then, thou babler Fame, And let me rest contented in my shame!

· Pray give my humble fervice to Mrs. PAGE:

' you honourable Lovers have a good conscience to support you in your vexations; but we alas-I am your humble fervant,

GILES LIMBERHAM.

 There is now going to the press at Cambridge, to be printed by subscription, on a new letter, and very good paper, Eusebij, Socratis, Sozemeni, &c. in 3 vols. folio, from the Parisian edition of Valesius, with the following improvements, v. Valesius's notes are all printed at the bottom of each page.

2. Large additions of Nota Variorum, both English and Foreigners. 3. An exact Chronology, with Lemmas on the side to direct to considerable passages. 4. A larger and more exact Index, with Maps. Price to Subscribers, 3 Guineas; on Royal Paper, 5 Guineas; one for the small, and two for the large, to be paid when 40 sheets are printed off, towards carrying on the great charge. Impression 500; and not 30 copies more than are subscribed for. Lover, in folio.

Saturday,

28.

GE:

nce

we

M.

to be aper,

e Pa-

ents.

page. eign-

o di-

t In-Royal

e, to

n the

than

Nº 29. Saturday, May 1, 1714.

Hilliam Helphia

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus Tam chari capitis?

Hor.

HE reader may remember that in my first Paper I described the circumstances of the persons, whose lives and conversations my future discourses should principally describe. Mr. OswALD, who is a widower, and in the first year of that distressed condition, having abfented himself from our meetings, I went to vifit him this evening. My intimacy made the fervant readily conduct me to him, though he had forbidden them to let any body come at I found him leaning at a table with a book before him, and faw, methoughts, a concern in him much deeper than that feriousness which arises from reading only, though the matter upon which a man has been employed has been never fo weighty. He faw in me, I believe, a friendly curiofity to know what put him into that temper, and began to tell me that he had been looking over a little collection

of

lay,

No

· li

f tl

al

tl

. p

th.

· q ol!

* th

· in an

th.

· W ci ci

ać ać

' va

th.

· fe tir

& th an

fo

· m

' pa

'th

dr dr

' tir

an

of books of his wife's; and faid, it was an inexpressible pleasure to him, that, though he thought her a most excellent woman, he found, by perufing little papers and minutes among her books, new reasons for loving her: this, continued he, now in my hand, is the "Contemplations Moral and Divine, of Sir Matthew Hale:" fhe has turned down, and written little remarks on the margin as she goes In order to give you a notion of her merit and good fense, pray give me leave to read three or four paragraphs which she has marked with this pencil. He here looked upon the pencil, till the memory of some little incident, of which it reminded him, filled his eyes with tears; which, to hide new reasons for loving her (but he only discovered his grief the more), he began in a broken voice to read Sir MAT-THEW's fecond chapter, in his discourse of religion.

'The truth and spirit of religion comes in a narrow compais, though the effect and operation thereof are large and diffusive. Solo'mon comprehended it in a few words, "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man:" the foul and life of religion is the fear of God, which is the principle of obedience; but obedience to his commands, which is an act or exercise of that · life,

life, is various, according to the variety of the commands of God. If I take a kernel of an acorn, the principle of life lies in it: the thing itself is but small, but the vegetable principle that lies in it takes up a less room than the kernel itself, little more than the quantity of a small pin's head, as is easy to be observed by experiment; but the exercise of that spark of life is large and comprehensive in its operation; it produceth a great tree, and in that tree the fap, the body, the bark, the limbs, the leaves, the fruit; and fo it is with the principles of true religion, the principle itself lies in a narrow compass, but the activity and energy of it is diffusive and various.

'This principle hath not only productions that naturally flow from it, but where it is, it ferments and affimilates, and gives a kind of tincture even to other actions that do not in their own nature follow from it, as the nature and civil actions of our lives; under the former was our Lord's parable of a grain of mustard seed, under the latter of his comparison of leaven, just as we see in other things of nature. Take a little red wine, and drop it into a vessel of water, it gives a new tincture to the water; or take a grain of salt and put it into fresh liquor, it doth computations.

arked the ident, with 29.

in-

he

und,

ong

this,

Con-

Mat-

and goes

merit

read

MATof res in a oper-Solo-Fear this is life of prins com-

f that · life,

n

fo

m

of

in

Ve

pe

m

ba

m wl

up

me

ex

de

tha

thi

cei

ple

fro

municate itself to the next adjacent part of the liquor, and that again to the next, until the whole be fermented: fo that small and

'little vital principle of the fear of God doth gradually, and yet suddenly, affimilate the actions of our life flowing from another principle. It rectifies and moderates our affections, and passions, and appetites; it gives f truth to our speech, sobriety to our senses,

' humility to our parts, and the like.

'Religion is best in its simplicity and purity, but difficult to be retained fo, without supersti-

' tions and accessions; and those do commonly in time stifle and choak the simplicity of religion, unless much care and circumspection be used:

the contemperations are fo many and fo cumbersome, that religion loseth its nature, or is frangled by them: just as a man that hath some excellent simple cordial spirit, and puts musk

' in it to make it fmell fweet, and honey to make it taste pleasant; and, it may be, cantharides to make it look glorious. Indeed by the infufions he hath given it a very fine fmell, and tafte, and colour; but yet he hath so clogged it, and fophisticated it with superadditions, that, it may be, he hath altered the nature, and destroyed the virtue of it.'

Here my friend could go on no further, but reaching to me the book itself, he leaned on

the 0 29.

t of

until

and

doth

the prin-

affec-

gives

enses,

urity,

persti-

nly in igion,

used:

cum-

, or is n fome

musk nake it

ides to infu-

11, and

logged

litions,

re, and the table, covering his eyes with his hands, while I read the following words on the margin, Grant that this superaddition, which I make, may be Love and Constancy to Mr. Oswald! No one could be unaffected with this incident, nor could I forbear falling into a kind of consolatory discourse, drawn from the satisfaction it must needs be, to find new proofs of the virtue of a person he so tenderly loved; but, observing his concern too quick and lively for conversation on that subject, I broke off with repeating only two distichs of Mr. Cowley to my Lady Vandyke, on the death of her husband.

Your joys and griefs were wont the same to be; Begin not now, blest pair, to disagree.

I cannot but think it was a very right sentiment in this lady, to make that duty of life, in which she took pleasure, the super-structure upon the motive of religion; for nothing can mend the heart better than an honourable Love, except religion. It sweetens disasters, and moderates good fortune, from a benevolent spirit that is naturally in it, and extends itself to things the most remote. It cannot be conceived, by those who are involved in libertine pleasures, the sweet satisfactions that must arise from the union of two persons who have left all P 2

er, but med on the ru

tel

gn

liv

· h

· h for the 6 0

the world, in order to place their chief delight in each other; and to promote that delight by all the methods which reason, urged by religion and duty, forwarded by passion, can intimate to the heart. Such a pair give charms to virtue, and make pleasant the ways of innocence: a deviation from the rules of such a commerce would be courting pain; for such a life is as much to be preferred to any thing that can be communicated by criminal satisfactions (to speak of it in the mildest terms), as sobriety and elegant conversation are to intemperance and rioting.

" In a short time will be published, "The Difference be"tween an Absolute and a Limited Monarchy, as it more par"ticularly regards the English Constitution." Being a Treatise written by Sir John Fortescue, Knt. Lord Chief Justice, and Lord High Chancellor of England, under King Henry VI.
Faithfully transcribed from the MS. copy in the Bodleian Library, and collated with three other MSS. Published, with some remaks, by John Fortescue Aland, of the Inner Temple, Esq.
F. R. S. Printed upon a very fine royal paper, in 8vo. Price 6s.
There being but a small number printed, those gentlemen who intend to purchase this book are desired to send in their names to Edm. Parker, at the Bible and Crown in Lombard-street, and Tho. Ward, in the Inner Temple, Booksellers, who will take care to deliver them on the day of publication. Loven in folio.
No 29.

· Tuefday,

light at by igion ate to 1° 29.

irtue, e: a nerce is as an be y and and reatife ce, and nry VI. cian Lith fome le, Esq; Price 6s. nen who r names eet, and in folio.

efday,

Nº 30. Tuesday, May 4. 1714.

Despicere unde queas alios, passimque videre Errare, atque viam palanteis quærere vitæ.

Luc.

It is a very great satisfaction to one who has put himself upon the Platonick soot, to look calmly on, while carnivorous Lovers run about howling for hunger, which the intellectual and more abstracted admirer is never gnawed with. The following letters give a lively representation of this matter.

Mr. MYRTLE.

'IF ever any man had reason to dispatch himself for Love, I am the person; I am lost to all intents and purposes, though I was the happiest man in the world, and have no one to accuse but myself of my present missortunes, and yet I am not to be accused neither. To open this riddle, you must know, Mr. Myrtle, that I am not now twenty years of age; I think that circumstance necessary to P 3 'tell

Nº

66

66

66

66 1

66 1

· n

· h

· n

· b f to

· h

· a

· ft

'n

· a

· p

· la

· u

· h il it

· h

· fe

tell you, for they fay the misfortune which befel me cannot happen but from the height of youth and blood. I live in the neighbourhood of a young lady of wealth, wit, and beauty; I love her to death; and fhe loves me with no less ardour. We have had frequent meetings by stealth, which are now interrupted by a very uncommon accident. a father who can never be enough fatisfied that his house is not to be burned before next morning; and for this reason, as well as, perhaps, other jealousies, insists upon the liberty of coming into my chamber when I am afleep, to fee whether my candle is out. One night he stole softly in, as indeed he always does, for fear of disturbing me, when I fast asleep was talking of my mistress. As he has fince told me, I named her, and then thought fit to go on as follows:

"The happiness we now enjoy is doubled by the secrecy of it. I will come again to-morwow night, and have ordered the hackney coachmen to be ready to let me get up to your window at the hour appointed. Be ready to throw up the sash when I tinkle with a piece of money at the glass. Your letters I keep always in a box under my bed, and my father can never come at them. Pray be which eight beaus me

s me quent interhave isfied perberty fleep, night

does, afleep fince ht fit ed by -morckney up to Be

Be with ters I d my ay be

fure

"fure to write; for the day-time is mighty "fad, to be troubled with the impertinence "and buffle of the world, and we never to "meet or hear from each other but at mid-"night."

The old gentleman took my key out of my pocket, and by that means made himself master of my papers; and, in an high point of honour, the next day told the parents of my mistress the danger their daughter was in of being carried off by his son, who had no pretentions to a woman of her fortune; though he can do very handsomely for me.

'This matter has been very indifcreetly managed by both our parents; the fervants, and confequently the neighbourhood, have the fory amongst them; and the innocentest woman in the world is at the mercy of bufy 'tongues. Now, Sir, I am not to judge of the 'actions of my father; but, as he has a longer purse than he will own, I defire you would 'lay before him, that he did not come at my ' fecret fairly, and that he ought, fince he goes upon punctilios, to have made no use of what he arrived at by the infirmity of a troubled 'imagination. He says indeed for himself, that 'he had this thought in his head; and therefore, had I owned the thing to him when he P 4

N°

se fi

" Y

66 T

or d

66 B

ce f ec y

cc tl

· bo

ev

to up

e no on kr

· let ' da

f th

' taxed me, without flewing my mistress's letters, he should have been obliged, by the manner of getting the fecret, to have kept it; but fince I had not owned it, had I not been confronted by her letters, which he got by taking my key out of my pocket, I am under the same degree of favour as a man who com" mitted any other crime would have been, who had betrayed himself in the same manner.

Mr. MYRTLE, you are a great casuist; and you fee what a jumble of unhappy circumstances

I am involved in, which I defire you to extricate me from by your best advice, which will come very feafonably to two families who sare much your friends, among whom none so much as the lady concerned in the story; and where she approves, you have an admirer in,

Sir, your most humble servant,

ULYSSES TRANSMARINUS.

I have notice given me, that I must cross the seas for this business; but I am resolved to flay at least in the same nation with my fair-one till I hear further.

Mr. MYRTLE, Friday, April 30, 1714.

'YOU'LL oblige extremely your most humble fervant in inferting this in your next

LOVER.

" MADAM,

MADAM,

" DEATH would have been welcomer than your letter in Thursday's Lover; for I must furvive the misery that would have ended. "Your sincerity is so far from being offensive, that my passion (were it now lawful to indulge it) is greater for you, and I cannot better prove the truth of mine than by refusing you, and making you as happy in your choice, as with you would have been the most unfortunate—"

'To Mr. MYRTLE.

SIR,

'THERE is a young woman in our neighbourhood that makes it her business to disturb every body that passes by with her beauty.
She runs to the window when she has a mind to do mischief; and then, when a body looks up at her, she runs back, as though she had not a mind to be seen, though she came there on purpose. Her hands and arms, you must know, are very sine; for that reason she never lets them be unemployed, but is feeding a squirrel, and catching people that pass by all day long. She has a way of heaving out of the window to see something, so that one, who extriwhich es who none fo ; and

Nº 30.

's let-

y the

pt it;

ot by

under com-

, who anner.

d you

INUS.

er in,

cross folved h my 1714. moft

r next

ADAM,

Nº 30

6

100 fif !

is is eve

· yo

6 bo

or or

f th

· he

f to

"E

Rich

T a fin

Burl

in fi

Nº 30. flands in the street just over against her, is taken with her fide face; one that is coming down fixes his eyes at the pole of her neck till he flumbles; and one coming up the ffreet is fixed flock-still by her eyes: she won't let any body go by in peace. I am confident, if you went that way yourfelf, the would pretend to get you from Mrs. Page. As for my own part, I fear her not; but there are several of our neighbours whose sons are taken in her chains, and feveral good women's husbands are always talking of her, and there is no quiet. I beg of you, Sir, to take some course with her, for she takes a delight in doing all this mischief. It would be right to lay down fome rules against her; or, if you please to appoint a time to come and speak to her, it would be a great charity to our ffreet, especi'ally to, Sir, your most humble servant, ANTHONY EYELID.

'HERE is a young gentlewoman in our ftreet, that I do not know at all, who looked full in my face, and then looked as if the was mistaken, but looked so pretty, that I cannot forget her; she does fomething or other to every one that passes by. 1 thought I would tell you of her. Yours, CH. Busy.' SIR, Cards

SIR.

'HERE is a young woman in our street, that looks often melancholy out of the window, as if she saw nobody, and nobody saw her, she is so intent. But she can give an account of every thing that passes, and does it to way-lay young men. Pray say something about her.

' Yours, unknown,

' TALL-BOY GAPESEED.'

SIR,

'there is a young woman in our neighbourhood, that makes people with bundles on their back stand as if they had none, and those who have none stand as if they had too heavy ones. Pray take her to your end of the town, for she interrupts business. Yours,

'RALPH DOODLE.'

 This day is published, in neat pocket volumes, "The "ENGLISHMAN," being the sequel of the GUARDIAN, by Richard Steele, Esq.

The ENGLISHMAN is likewise printed in a large octavo, and a small number of them on royal paper. To be sold by Ferd. Burleigh, in Amen Corner; printed by Sam. Buckley. LOVER in folio, No 30.

Thursday,

for my feveral in her abands is no course ang all down ease to her, it especi-

Nº 30.

her, is oming

neck

freet

n't let

ent, if

ELID.

in our looked he was cannot her to would Busy.'

SIR,

Nº 31

this ma

wh

· lon · W · me

· pa

H

ful gi

· vo tu

·I fe fe

· ve

· he

· of

· be

· he

· W

· a

" th

· W

· d

N° 31. Thursday, May 6, 1714.

Ridet hoc, inquam, Venus ipsa; rident Simplices Nymphæ, ferus & Cupido, Semper ardentes acuens sagittas Cote cruentâ.

HOR.

Mr. MYRTLE,

London, May 4.

Remember, some time ago, that I heard a gentleman, who often talked out of a book, speak of a king that was so fond of his wife, that his mind overflowed with the happiness he had in the possession of her beauties. I remember it was just so that talking fellow expressed himself; but all that I want of his story is, that he shewed his queen paked from ftory is, that he shewed his queen naked from a chink in the bed-chamber; and that the queen, finding this out, referred it so highly, that she, after mature deliberation, thought fit to plot against her husband, and married the man to whom he had exposed her person. I have but a puzzled way of telling a flory; but į

Nº 31.

this circumstance among such great people may give you some thoughts upon an accident of the like kind, which happened to me a man of middle rank.

There is a very gay, pleasant young lady, whom I was well acquainted with, and had long known as being an intimate of my fifter's. We were the other day a riding out; the wo-' men and men on fingle horses; it happened that this young lady and I out-rid the com-. pany, and in the avenue of the wood between ' Hampstead and Highgate her horse threw her 'full upon her head. She is a quick-witted girl, and finding chance had discovered more of her beauty than ever she designed to favour me with, she in an instant lay on the turf in a decent manner as in a trance, before 'I could alight and come to her affistance. I fell in love with her when she was topfie-tur-'vey, and from that instant professed myself her fervant. She always laughed, and turned 'off the discourse, and said she thought it must be fo: the whole family were mightily amazed how this declaration came all of a sudden, and 'why, after two or three years intimacy, not 'a word, and yet now I so very eager. Well; the father had no exception to me, and the ' wedding-day was named, when, all of a fud-' den, the father has fent my mistress to a disf tant

Hor.

ard a of a

of his hap-

ellow f his

from t the

ghly, ught

rried fon. I but this

· co

of · co

6 th

ex.

tra

« m wi Wi

eft

va:

· m co co

c ac

f pr

f to

ca

tri

· lac

the ve

f th

· we

· de

to we · ha

· lo

' (W

· WO

tant relation in the country, and I am discarded. Now, Sir, what I defire of you is to insert this, that her father may understand what she meant, when she said, "I shall be ashamed to be the wife of any other man;" and what I meant when I said that, "I know more of her already than any other husband perhaps ever may." These expressions were let drop when the father shewed some signs of parting us; and I appeal to you, whether, according to nice rules, she is not to prefer me to all others. This is a serious matter in its consequences, and I won't be choused; therefore pray insert it. The whole is humbly submitted by, Sir,

'Your most unfortunate,
'humble servant,
'TIM PIP.'

To Mr. MARMADUKE MYRTLE.

OBSERVING you play the Casuist, the

SIR,

Doctor, nay often descend even to the Lettercarrier, for the service of Lovers, I am apt to think my present condition brings me within your cognizance, and countenances this application. Sir, I ever was a great admirer of a single state, and my chief study has been to cardis to fland ill be an;"
know
band
were figns ther, refer ter in used;
mbly

P 1 P.

etterpt to within s aprer of een to ollect collect encomiums in its favour, and inftances of unhappy marriages to confirm me. I never could think myself the sad half of a man. or that my cares wanted doubling. The best exercise I ever performed at school was, a translation of Juvenal's fixth fatyr. member my master said smiling, Sirrah, you will die a batchelor. Since I came to man's eftate, I have every day talked over, with little variation, the common-place fayings against matrimony. I believe they have been more constant than my prayers. I must now, Sir, acquaint you how I became disarmed of those principles in an instant, and how other thoughts took place, fo that I beg leave hereby to recant, and protest against those damnable doctrines. And, further, I humbly beseech all ladies with whom I converse, to bestow on me the encouragement which new and true converts generally meet with. I was riding in the country last spring; of all days in the week it was upon a Tuefday; when, on a fudden, I heard a voice which guided my fight 'to two young women unknown to me: they were negligently, I won't say meanly drest, 'had large staffs in their hands, and were fol-'lowed by spaniels and grey-hounds. '(whom I now fee with the Lover's telescope) wore a bonnet. On her I cast my eyes till · the the brightness of hers made them fail me, that is, I have feen nothing in its true light fince. I am a piece of a scholar, yet am not able, Mr. MYRTLE, to affirm what I faw, and how this object struck the organs of my body, affected my foul and mind, and produced this lafting idea. The old philosophers, you know, attributed a foul to the loadstone, when they could not find out the reason of its union Whence shall I deduce the cause of to iron. my condition? shall I speak of an impulse, pressure of insensible particles, secret power, destiny, the stars, magick? or shall I say, in the lawyers term, that every feature had its copies? or must I mention occult quality, or, as the genteel world translate it, je ne scay quoy? I should have told you I was a hunting when I faw this object; that, when it fled, my good spirited gelding refused the gate that parted us, and ran away with me. This was as good as a second game, for I, who before was the greatest sportsman in the country, have ever fince haunted the woods to figh, not halloo. In lonely shades by day, and moonfhine walks by night (fhe ever by my fide) I have found my only pleasure. This condi-' tion I have fuffered for a long feries of time; but wandering in the same wood I saw a country girl in the fame bonnet in which I formerly

he la

No.

· fe re m

an tro de

fel

.

Nº

its flupon formafter,

what

31,

that nce.

ble,

how

ody,

iced

you

vhen

nion

fe of

ulse,

ower, y, in d its y, or, fcay nting l, my that

s was

efore

untry, h, not moon-ide) I

condi-

time;

faw a hich I

rmerly

formerly beheld my great calamity. I followed her, and found the abode of her for whom I languish. Ma charmante is your constant reader, who hereby will have some notion of me and my name. I crave, Sir, your assistance herein, and (to ease yourself of another troublesome letter) your advice, in case of a denial to wait upon her. I have abundance more to say, but desire you to say it to yourself in behalf of, Sir, ' Your enamoured humble fervant.'

Nº 32. Saturday, May 8, 1714.

Έν δικαιοσύνη συλλήθδην ωᾶσ' άριθη ές ιν.

ARISTOT.

THE task which I have enjoined myself in these Papers, is to describe Love in all its shapes; to warn the unwary of those rocks, upon which so many in all ages have split formerly, do split still, and will split hereafter, as long as men and women shall be what they now are; and to delineate the true and unseigned delight which virtuous minds

k

le

al

Ce

on

in

are tha

hig

to

and

Con

por

den

not

con

old

was

upor

once

wifd

ever

avoi

feel in the enjoyment of their lawful and warranted passions. This task, the farther I go, I find, grows the more upon my hands. The dreadful effects which have attended irregular pursuits in this way, have led some shallow philosophers to arraign that as simply unlawful, or at least as unbecoming a wise man, which is certainly one of the first and sundamental laws of nature; and they have seemed to look upon that as a curse, which, rightly managed, is the greatest blessing that our Creator has given us here below; and which is, in truth,

That cordial drop heaven in our cup has thrown, To make the nauseous draught of life go down,

Yet, on the other hand, when (comparatively speaking) so very many miscarry in this particular, more than in any other single circumstance belonging to human life, one is tempted to cry out, with my Lord BROOKE in his Alaham,

O wearifom condition of mortality!
Born to one law, and to another bound;
Vainly begotten, yet forbidden vanity; Created fick, commanded to be found!
If nature fure did not delight in blood,
She would have found more easy ways to good,

But fince complaints under most pressures avail but little; fince in every species of actions there and er I nds. dirome nply man, indaemed ghtly Creais, in 32.

-

wn, trively partircummpted in his

own,

good, reffures actions

there is a right and a wrong, which circumstances only can determine; fince our Maker (for greater reasons than those which our laws afcribe to our princes) cannot possibly do any wrong, or, as the divines speak, cannot be the author of fin; fince what was effential to human nature before the fall is in itself most certainly good, when rightly purfued; and fince one may observe that mistakes and false steps in this matter meet with harsher censures, and are often more severely punished in this world, than many other crimes which feem to be of a higher nature; I have thought it worth while to enquire into this matter as exactly as I could. and to prefent the publick with my thoughts concerning the real differences between the several forts of evil actions, as I shall find opportunity, and as my importunate correspon. dents, who are often in hafte, and who must not be disobliged, will give me leave.

One method, as I take it, to induce men to avoid any evil, is to know not only wherein it confifts, but how great it is. The Stoics of old pretended that all fins were equal; that it was as great a crime to fleal a pin, as to rob upon the road. When their wife man was once out of his way, he loft his pretentions to wifdom; and when those were gone, whatfoever he did or said afterwards in that state of aberration,

 Q_2

fi

ir

th

m

g

in

CO

be

th

ar

CO

we

fro

are

go

ab

the

oui

and

Bu

to

Sco

aberration, it was all one. Sins were fins, and where the effence was the fame, the degrees mattered little. This contradicts human nature, and common fense; and the laws of all nations distinguish, in the punishments which they inflict, between crimes, as they are more or less pernicious to the society in and against which they are committed. That God does fo too, we need not question. The Judge of the whole earth must certainly do right. When we know wherein the true greatness of every fin confifts, we shall be able to judge of our own faults, and sometimes of the faults of others; we shall see why we ought to avoid them where there is room for compassion; and where punishment is necessary, we may be fure then to be severe in the right place; and, by knowing how and when to forgive, may fometimes rife those that are finking, and often fave those from utter destruction who, if abandoned, would be irrecoverably loft. This is a large, and I think an useful theme, and it is what I have feen fufficiently enlarged upon in those books of morality which have come in my way. Now, if in my enquiries I have an eye all along to the Christian institution, and take a view of the fins and irregularities of mankind in fuch a light as is confiftent with the practice of our Saviour and his Apostles; I hope hope the fofter and politer part of my readers will not be upon that account disgusted.

The aggravation of all crimes is be estimated either from the persons injured or offended, or from the intrinsic malice from whence those injuries and offences proceed. All offences are against either our Maker, our neighbour, or ourselves. Offences against our Maker have this particular aggravation, that they are committed against the person to whom we have the greatest obligations, and consequently do more immediately contradict the light of our own conscience. The obligations of our original being, and of our constant preservation during the whole course of our lives, which takes in all the bleffings that we daily receive from him. are so peculiarly due to God, that they are not communicable to any earthly being. For the' we may, and do hourly, receive advantages from our fellow-creatures, yet those advantages are ultimately to be referred to God, by whose good providence those fellow-creatures are enabled to do us good. And, befides, the good they do us is as much for their fakes as for ours, fince the advantages they receive from us, and those we receive from them, are reciprocal. But though our Creator is always doing good to us, we can do none to him, and upon that score he has a title to our obedience, and that implicit,

all ich ore inft loes of ht.

32.

and

ees

na-

to the to to the to to the to to the to to to the to to to the t may ften oanis a

it is n in e in

e an s of with hope

Nº

ear

pai

bec

we

and

US

nef

Th

ma

wh

Ma

and

fall

cor

fing

oth

me

for

our

ma

offe pla

me

aga

fins

(wh

forl

implicit, when once we are satisfied it is he that commands. This makes idolatry to be so crying a fin, because it is a communication of that honour to the creature (whether inanimate or animate it matters not) to which it can have no possible title, and is due to the Creator only. Upon this account also irreligion and atheism are still worse, because they tear up all religion by the roots; and all service and worship is denied to him to whom the utmost service and worship is justly due. This is so plain, that it needs neither enlargement nor proof.

The fecond degree of offences is of those which are committed against our neighbours. They are equally God's creatures as ourselves, and have an equal title to his protection; and we ought to think that they are equally dear to Offences against them may be comprehended under one common title of injustice, And what divines usually call fins against the fecond table are, if strictly examined, but so many forts of injuries against our neighbours. The pains, the care, the trouble, and, above all, the love of parents, demand honour from their children; and therefore, when they do not meet with it, they are injured; this shews the justice of the fifth commandment. To take away our neighbour's life is the greatest injury which can

32.

s he

be fo

on of mate

have only.

neisim

igion

ip is

e and

hat it

those

ours.

elves.

and

ear to

npre-

ffice.

A the

ut fo

ours.

e all,

their

meet

ustice

y our

which

can

ean be done him, because it is absolutely irreparable. Next to that are injuries done to his bed, and for the same reason too. The goods we enjoy are the means of our subfishence here; and he that against our wills takes them from us does more or less, according to the greatness of our loss, deprive us of our subfistence. This shews the fixth, seventh, and eighth commandments. And fince none of those things, to which by the original grant from our common Maker we have a just title, are secure, if calumny and false accusations are once allowed; therefore false-witnessing is also forbidden in the ninth commandment. And fince a defire of poffeffing what is not our own, and what we fee others enjoy, will, if encouraged, naturally lead men to as many forts of injustice, as there are forts of defires; therefore coveting what is not mandment.

By this detail it plainly appears why I fet offences against our neighbours in the second place. When God gave the Ten Commandments, he mentioned no offences but those against himself and our neighbours, and left the fins which are immediately against ourselves (which are properly sins of intemperance) to be forbidden by other laws.

our own is fenced against by the tenth com-24

But

But then, though fins against ourselves ought, with respect to their guilt (which is what I here propose to consider) to be reckoned last; yet it does not follow from thence that they are not fins, and consequently do not deserve punishment. Whatsoever disables us in any measure from doing our duty to God, or our neighbour, is so far an injustice towards them, and robs them of their due, and is fo far a crime. I fay an injustice, because, as I said before, all faults in my opinion are ultimately to be referred to that: even uncharitableness is injustice, because our common Creator, who has made us all liable to want, and confequently under a necessity of desiring assistance, expects we should be helpful to one another, because he is good to us. And when Aristotle says, in those words that are the motto of this paper, that "All virtues are contained in justice," he states the true notion of good and evil; and it is as applicable to virtues confidered in a Christian light, as in a natural one. This then is the first rule by which we are to weigh the different degrees of good and evil.

Tuefday,

N° 3

wich vited famo Hoff Mr. nobl mon nefs, be do to ra

IN 106 feet 1

thick

as I

twice

N° 32, bught, I here yet it re not unisheasure abour, d robs abour, d robs I fay faults red to e, beade us nder a should e," he and it

s good

those

Christies ifferent

uesday,

N° 33. Tuefday, May 11, 1714.

the prevent had the skitched with -Animum pictura pascit-

VIRG.

Went the other day down the river, and dined with some virtuoso friends at Greenwich. The purpose of the gentleman, who invited us, was to entertain us with a fight of that samous cieling in the great hall at Greenwich Hospital, painted by our ingenious countryman Mr. Thornhill, who has executed a great and noble design with a masterly hand, and uncommon genius. The regularity, symmetry, boldness, and prominence of the figures are not to be described; nor is it in the power of words to raise too great an idea of the work. As well as I could comprehend it from seeing it but twice, I shall give a plain account of it.

IN the middle of the cieling (which is about 106 feet long, and 56 feet wide, and near 50 feet high) is a very large oval frame painted and carved in imitation of gold, with a great thickness rising in the inside to throw up the figures

Nº 33

mer, days to the flower other

King thron attendence

> Fasce conce holdi fentir and I Euro

O

April, June a lion, va from th felf from in red, ceive

Gemini over Li Aquari

are

figures to the greater heighth; the oval is fastened to a great suffeat adorned with roses in imitation of copper. The whole is supported by eight gigantick figures of flaves, four on each fide, as though they were carved in stone; between the figures, thrown in heaps into a covering, are all manner of maritime trophies in metzo relievo, as anchors, cables, rudders, masts, sails, blocks, capstals, sea-guns, sea-carriages, boats, pinnaces, oars, firetchers, colours, enfigns, pennants, drums, trumpets, bombs. mortars, fmall arms, granadoes, powder barrels, fire arrows, grapling-irons, cross staves, quadrants, compaffes, &c. all in flone colours, to give the greater beauty to the rest of the cieling, which is more fignificant.

About the oval in the infide are placed the twelve figns of the Zodiack; the fix northern figns, as Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, are placed on the north fide of the oval; and the fix fouthern figns, as Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricotnus, Aquarius, Pisces, are to the fouth, with three of them in a groupe which compose one quarter of the year: the figns have their attitudes *, and their draperies

^{*} Aries is of a turbulent aspect, with little winds and rein hovering about him, his drapery of a blueish green, shadowed with dark russet, to denote the changeableness of the weather April

Nº 33

val is

ofes in ported

our on

ftone;

into a ophies

adders,

ea · car-

olours,

ombs,

parrels,

quad-

urs, to cieling,

ced the orthern , Leo,

e oval;

corpio,

es, are

groupe

ar: the

raperies

are varied and adapted to the feafons they possess, as the cool, the blue and the tender green to the Spring, the yellow to the Summer, and the red and flame colour to the Dogdays and Autumnal feafon, the white and cold to the Winter; likewise the fruits and the flowers of every feafon as they fucceed each other.

In the middle of the oval are represented King William and Queen Mary, fitting on a throne under a great pavilion or purple canopy, attended by the four cardinal virtues, as Prudence, Temperance, Fortitude, and Justice.

Over the Queen's head is Concord with the Fasces, at her feet two doves, denoting mutual concord and innocent agreement, with Cupid holding the King's scepter, while he is prefenting Peace with the lamb and olive branch, and Liberty expressed by the Athenian cap, to Europe, who, laying her crowns at his feet, receives them with an air of respect and grati-

April, or Taurus, is more mild; May, or Gemini, in blue; June a calm red; July more reddith, and, as he leans upon his lion, vails a little from the fun; Virgo almost naked, and flying from the heat of the fun; Libra in deep red; Scorpio vails himfelf from the scorching sun in a flame-coloured mantle; Sagittarius in red, less hot; December, or Capricorn, blueish; Aquarius in a waterish green; Pisces in blue. Over Aries, Taurus, Gemini, prefides Flora; over Cancer, Leo, Virgo, prefides Ceres; over Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Bacchus; and over Capricorn, Aquarius, Pisces, Hyems hovering over a brazen pot of fire.

STEELE.

tude.

and rain Madowed

e weather

April

Heim

holes

tude. The King tramples Tyranny under his feet, which is exprest by a French personage, with his leaden crown falling off, his chains, yoke and iron fword broken to pieces, cardinal's cap, triple-crowned mitres, &c. tumbling down. Just beneath is Time bringing Truth to light; near which is a figure of Architecture, holding a large drawing of part of the hospital with the cupola, and pointing up to the royal founders, attended by the little Genii of her art. Beneath her is wisdom and heroic virtue, represented by Pallas and Hercules, deftroying Ambition. Envy, Covetousness, Detraction, Calumny, with other vices, which feem to fall to the earth, the place of their more natural abode.

Over the royal pavilion is shewn, at a great heighth, Apollo in his golden chariot, drawn by four white horses, attended by the Hora, and morning dews falling before him, going his course through the twelve figns of the Zodiack, and from him the whole plafond or cieling is enlightened.

Each end of the cieling is raised in perspective, with a ballustrade and elliptic arches, supported by groupes of stone figures, which form a gallery of the whole breadth of the hall; in the middle of which gallery, (a) though on the stock) going into the upper hall, is seen in perspective the tafferil of the Blenof V enem man fentin fword Than up th ing each that chim comp At hall, > gally is th Seven other galle midd

Dani feffio perni hand

holdi two p Ifaac

heim

Nº 33.

der his

sonage,

chains,

rdinal's

down.

light;

polding

ith the

unders,

Beneath

efented

bition.

y, with

th, the

a great

heim man of war, with all her galleries, portholes open, &c. to one fide of which is a figure of Victory flying, with spoils taken from the enemy, and putting them aboard the English man of war. Before the ship is a figure representing the city of London, with the arms, sword, and cap of maintenance, supported by Thame and Isis, with other small rivers offering up their treasures to her; the river Tine pouring forth sacks of coals. In the gallery on each side the ship are the Arts and Sciences that relate to Navigation, with the great Archimedes, many old philosophors consulting the compass, &c.

At the other end, as you return out of the hall, is a gallery in the same manner, in the middle of which is the stern of a beautiful gally filled with Spanish trophies. Under which is the Humber with his pigs of lead; the Severn, with the Avon falling into her, with other leffer rivers. In the north end of the gallery is the famous Tycho Brahe, that noble Danish knight, and great ornament of his profession and human nature; near him is Copernicus with his Pythagorean system in his hand; next to him is an old mathematician holding a large table, and on it are described two principal figures, of the incomparable Sir Isaac Newton, on which many extraordinary things drawn Horæ,

going the Zofond or erspectarches, which of the ry, (26 er hall, e Blen-

Nº 3

of F

four flut

the

rofe

heig

live

be | pol

niou

great

inge

of lie

The

with

very be n 25. (

is at kno

be n

things in that art are built. On the other end of the gallery, to the fouth, is our learned Mr. FLAMSTEAD, Reg. Aftron. Profeff, with his ingenious disciple Mr. THOMAS WESTON. In Mr. FLAMSTEAD's hand is a large scroll of paper, on which is drawn the great etlipse of the fun that will happen on April 1715; near him is an old man with a pendulum counting the seconds of time, as Mr. FLAMSTEAD makes his observations with his great mural are and tube on the descent of the moon on the Severn, which at certain times form such a roll of the tides as the failors corruptly call the Higre, instead of the Eager, and is very dangerous to all ships in its way. This is also exprest by rivers tumbling down by the moon's influence into the Severn. In this gallery are more arts and sciences relating to navigation.

All the great rivers, at each end of the hall, have their proper product of fish issuing out of their vases.

In the four great angles of the cieling, which are over the arches of the galleries, are the four elements, as Fire, Air, Earth, and Water, represented by Jupiter, Juno, Cybele, and Neptune; with their leffer deities accompanying, as Vulcan, Iris, the Fauni, Amphitrite, with all their proper attitudes, &c.

At

V° 33.

r end

Mr.

is in-

n'Mr.

aper,

f the near ount-

EAD

nural

on on uch a

l the

dan-

ex-

oon's

y are

hall,

ut of hich

four

epre-

une;

Vul-

their

m.

At one end of the great oval is a large figure of Fame descending, riding on the winds, and sounding forth the praises of the royal pair.

All the fides of the hall are adorned with fluted pillasters, trophies of shells, corals, pearls; the jambs of the windows ornamented with roses impanneled, or the opus reticulamium heightened with green gold.

The whole raises in the spectator the most lively images of glory and victory, and cannot be beheld without much passion and emotion.

N. B. Sir JAMES BATEMAN was the first proposer and the first benefactor to this cieling.

* The Mathematical WATER THEATRE, of the late ingenious Mr. Winstanly, is now opened; and shown for the benefit of his widow, every evening at five of the clock. There is the greatest curiofities in Water-works, the like was never performed before; with feveral new additions made this fpring. And the ingenious barrel will entertain the spectators with several forts of liquors, hot and cold, fuitable to the feafon, without mixture. The stage will be changed into three different forms, adorned with figures and fountains as proper; all playing of water, and fome with fire mingling with water, fo fall into great cascades very delightful and fine; with many more curiofities than can be mentioned here, or be exprest, but by being feen. Boxes 28. 6d. Pit 28. First gallery 18. 6d. Upper gallery 6d. This is at the lower end of Piccadilly, towards Hyde-park, and is known by the Wind mill on the top of it. And the house will be made warm in cold weather. Lover, in folio, No. 33.

At

N° 34. Thursday, May 13, 1714.

- Waking life appears a dream. ROSAMOND.

EPROACH is of all things the most painful to Lovers, especially to us of the platonick kind; this makes it excessively grievous to me, that a paper, though a very dull one, called the Monitor, accuses me of writing obscenely. He is a stupid fellow, and does not understand that the same object, according to the artist who represents it, may be decent, or unfit to be looked at. Naked figures, by a masterly hand, are so drawn, sometimes, as to be incapable of exciting immodest thoughts. I have, in my paper of May the 6th, spoken of an amour that owes its beginning, and makes itself necessary to be lawfully consummated, from an accident of a lady's falling topfy-turvy: upon which this heavy rogue fays, " Is this fuffered in a Christian country?" Yes it is, and may very lawfully, but not when fuch auk-

ward

5

well
I ave
most passa
the s
she c
Heat
who passi indist taken our

Nº 3

ward

harm of w wome

world

As paffin in bein the HTLL' hall it day in where ainec

heyv

ward tools as he pretend to meddle with the fame subject: none but persons extremely well bred ought to touch ladies petticoats; but I aver, that I have faid nothing to offend the most chaste and delicate, and all who read that paffage may be very innocent; and the lady of the flory may be a very good Christian, though the did not in her appearance differ from an Heathen, when the fell upon her head. who follow Plato, or are engaged in the high passion, can see a lady's ankle with as much indifference as her wrift: we are so inwardly taken up, that the fame ideas do not fpring in our imaginations, as do with the common world; we are made gentle, foft, courteous, and harmless, from the force of the belle passion; of which coarse dunces, with an appetite for women like that they have for beef, have no conception.

As I gave an account the other day of my paffing a day at Greenwich with much delight in beholding a piece of painting of Mr. THORN-HILL's, which is an honour to our nation; I hall now give an account of my paffing yesterday morning, an hour before dinner, in a place where people may go and be very well enterained, whether they have, or have not, a good afte. They will certainly be well pleased, for hey will have unavoidable opportunities of feeing

R

what

ND.

nost

34.

the rievone, ting not g to

, or oy a

as to ghts. en of nakes ated.

rvy: this , and

auk-

ward

iv,

cor

ten

pu

abl

fale

ima

fem

othe

the

row

bine

amb

ture

beau

difti

by g perfe

to n

the c

I cou

this t

kings

fuch

would

to on place

eye,

You o

what they most like, in the most various and agreeable shapes and positions, I mean their own dear felves. The place I am going to mention is Mr. Gumley's glass-gallery over I little thought I should the New Exchange. ever in the Lover have occasion to talk of fuch a thing as trade; but when a man walks in that illustrious room, and reflects what incredible improvement our artificers of England have made in manufacture of glass in thirty years time, and can suppose such an alteration of our affairs in other parts of commerce, it is demonstrable that the nations, who are possessed of mines of gold, are but drudges to a people, whose arts and industry, with other advantages natural to us, may make itself the shop of the world. We are arrived at such perfection in this ware of which I am speaking, that it is not in the power of any potentate in Europe to have so beautiful a mirror as he may purchase here for a trifle, by all the cost and charge that he can lay out in his dominions. It is a modest computation, that England gains fifty thousand pounds a year by exporting this commodity for the fervice of foreign-nations: the whole owing to the inquifitive and mechanic as well as liberal genius of the late Duke of Buckingham*. This prodigious effect by the art of man, from parts of nature that are as unlikely to produce

* See SPECT. No 509, vol. VII. Note.

it,

34. and heir g to over ould k of valks t ingland thirty ation it is Teffed eople, ntages of the ion in at it is urope rchase e that modest oufand ity for owing as liham*. , from it, as one would suppose a man could burn common earth to a tulip, opens a field of contemplation which would lead me too far from my purpose, which is only to celebrate the agreeable economy of placing the feveral wares to fale, in the gallery of which I am talking. imagination can work up a more pleafing affemblage of beautiful things, to fet off each other, than are here actually laid together. In the midst of the walk are set in order a long row of rich tables, on many of which lie cabinets inlaid or wholly made of corals, conchs. ambers, or the like parts of matter which nature feems to have formed wholly to flew the beauty of her works, and to have thrown and diffinguished from the mass of earth, as she does by great gifts and endowments those spirits and persons of men, and women, whom she defigns to make instruments of great consideration in the crowd of her people. When I walked here, I could not but lament to my companion, that this method was not taken up when the Indian kings were lately in England *. The furprize fuch appearances as these would put them into would have been as great as a new fense added to one of us; to fee the things about us fo placed, as that three or four persons can to the eye, in an instant, become a large affembly! You cannot move or do any the least indifferent.

* See TAT. No 171; and SPECT. No 50. Notes.

roduce

vary the scene around with additional pleasure: among other circumstances, I could not but be pleased to see a lap-dog at a loss for an instant, for his lady, and beginning to run to the image of her in a glass, until he was driven back by himself, whom he saw running towards him. The poor animal corrected his mistake, by tracing her footsteps by his sense less subject to mistake, and arrived at her feet, to the no small diversion of the company who saw it, and the envy of several sine gentlemen, whom the odd accident diverted from looking at themselves, to behold the beauteous Bellamira.

It would be an arrogance to pretend to convey diffinctly by the ear a pleasure that should come in at the eye; but my gentle reader will thank me for many pleafing thoughts he or she had not ever had before, in a place more new than he could arrive at by landing in a foreign nation. About forty years ago it was the fashion for all the gallants of the town, the wits and the braves, to walk in the New Exchange below, to flew themselves. What an happiness have those whose fortunes and humours are capable of receiving gratifications in this place, that fuch a scene was displayed in their lifetime! The learned have not more reason to rejoice, that they live in the fame days with NEWTON, than the gay, the delicate, and the curious frie

Nº

cui

tha

-

The

con to t

rai

co yo

ca ca

you

ure:

it be

tant,

him.

bject e no and

the

nem-

con-

ould

will

curious in luxury of dress and furniture have, that there has appeared in their time my honest friend, and polite director of artificers, Mr. GUMLEY.

Nº 35. Saturday, May 15, 1714.

The men who flatter highest, please us best.

Helen to Paris, Ovid's Epistles.

I Shall make the following letters the entertainment of this day, and recommend the contents of the first in a more particular manner to the serious consideration of all my female readers.

Dear MARMADUKE,

'THOUGH you have treated the fair sex with an air of distinction suitable to the character you bear, I presume you will make no scruple to admonish them of any faults, by the amendment of which they may still become more amiable. What I complain to you of, is from my own experience. My case is this.

R 3

' MIRANDA

r fhe new eign hion and beiness e calace, life-

re-

with

the

ious

Nº 3

· pre

· rac

· fer

e per

4 fo

for wit kno

· Inf

in t

and

wa:

· mu

s enc

fhe

·Ih

· his · fhe

' tha

fro

the

wit

'alw

' inc

f ma

gei

' the

"MIRANDA is in the bloom of fixteen, and fhines in all the beauties of her fex. Her face, her shape, her mein, her wit, furprise, and engage all who have the happiness to know her. MIRANDA is the idol of my heart, the object of all my hopes and fears. None of her actions are indifferent to me. look and motion gives me either pleasure or pain. I have omitted no reasonable methods to convince her of the greatness of my passion; 'yet as she is one with whom I propose to pass the remainder of my life, I cannot forbear ' mixing the fincerity of the Friend with the tenderness of the Lover. In short, Sir, I am one of those unfortunate men, who think young women ought to be treated like rational creatures. I forbear therefore to launch out into all the usual excesses of flattery and romance; to make her a goddess, and myself a ' madman; to give up all my fenses and reason to be moulded and informed as the thinks proper. The bottom to the state of the

From hence arise all our differences. MrRANDA is one of those fashionable ladies, who, expecting an implicit faith from their admirers, are impatient and affronted at the least fhew of contradiction.

As she was lately reading the works of a celebrated author, who has thought fit to represent

Nº 35. , and Her prise, ess to heart, None Every ire or thods affion; o país orbear th the I am think ational ch out d royself a reason

Mi-, who, admire least thinks

of a to reresent

present himself in his writings under the character of an old man, the was pleased to obferve, that it was very uncommon to fee a person at fourscore have so lively a fancy, and ' fo brisk an imagination. I could not help informing her upon this occasion, that I had frequently had the honour to drink a glass with the gentleman, and that to my certain 'knowledge he was not yet turned of forty. 'Instead of thanking me for setting her right 'in this particular, the immediately took fire, and asked me with a frown, "Whether that 'was my breeding, to contradict a lady?" You 'must know, Sir, this question usually puts an end to all our disputes. A little while after, s fhe defired my opinion of her lap-dog; and 'I had no fooner unfortunately observed, that his ears were fomewhat of the shortest, than ' she roundly asked me, ". Whether I defigned 'that for a compliment?" I took the freedom from hence, in an honest plain way, to expose 'the weakness and folly of being delighted ' with flattery, to tell her that ladies ought not 'always to be complimented, to enumerate the 'inconveniences it often leads them into, to make her sensible of the ill designs men ' generally aim at by it, and the mean opinion 'they must entertain of those who are delighted with with it. All this would not do; I could not ' get one kind look from her that night.

R 4

N° 35

I have told you already, that I have used all reasonable methods to convince her of my paffion, and I am fure I have the preference in her esteem to all other pretenders. She knows I love, and, in spight of all her arts to hide it, I know I am beloved: yet, from these little differences, and a certain coquet humour which makes her delight to fee her Lover uneasy, though at the same time she torments herself, I have often despaired of our ever coming together. I thought however the following verses, which I presented to her yesterday, made some impression on her; and if the fees you think them tolerable enough to allow them a place in your Paper, f I am in hopes they may help to haften the happy day.

T.

Tell me, MIRANDA, why should I Lament and languish, pine and die; While you, regardless of my pain, Seem pleas'd to hear your slave complain?

II.

Dame Eve, unskill'd in female arts And modern ways of tort'ring hearts,

No

hav

wh

wo

be 'be

" W

" fo

Nº 35. ld not e used of my

erence She er arts , from coquet ee her ne she red of howefented ion on lerable Paper, ten the n?

No

No fooner faw her fpark than lov'd, Confess'd her flame, and his approv'd.

III.

Nature still breaks through all disguise, Glows in your cheeks, and rules your eyes. Love trembles in your hands and heart, Your panting breafts proclaim his dart.

IV.

No more, MIRANDA, then be coy, No longer keep us both from joy; No longer fludy to conceal What all your actions thus reveal.

I am, dear MARMADUKE,

' Your most obedient humble servant.'

'Mr. MYRTLE,

I SEND you the enclosed letter, which I have lately received from a young Templar, who is my humble fervant. I defire you would inform me, whether what he afferts be law, or equity. His letter runs thus.

" MADAM,

"HAPPENING lately to be in company "with a venerable lady who has a very large " fortune, I was so complaisant to ask her if " fhe would allow me to do her the honour to " make her a wife? She was so kind to ask me " again, whether I was in jest, or earnest? Upon my repeating the question, she returned my

"civility, and told me, she thought I was mad.

"But upon my third application she consented,

"that is, she told me positively she would " never have me. This I take for an absolute "promise, having been frequently informed that womens answers in such cases are to be " interpreted backwards.

"I have consulted a proctor in Doctors

"Commons, who feems to be of opinion, that it has the full force of a contract; and that

" (having witness of it) I might recover half

" her fortune, should she offer to marry any " one else.

"I mention this, madam, not only to let

" you see that I can have the same encouragement elsewhere which you give me, but to

" admonish you how much care you ought to "take of promising any other man marriage,

" by declaring positively that you will never " have him, except

"Your most obedient humble servant,

" TOM TRUELOVE."

Tuesday,

Nº

Nº 3

kind fexe from feru

ing.

fam fo f out to l

mu

end

a fridife

Nº 35. our to ask me Upon ned my s mad. fented, would bfolute formed to be Octors n, that d that er half ry any to let uragebut to ght to rriage, never ant, LOVE."

esday,

Tuesday, May 18, 1714.

Concubitu probibere vage-

Hor.

T Have heard it objected, by several persons, against my Papers, that they are apt to kindle Love in young hearts, and inflame the fexes with a defire for one another: I am fo far from denying this charge, that I shall make no scruple to own it is the chief end of my writing. Love is a passion of the mind (perhaps the noblest) which was planted in it by the fame hand that created it. We ought to be fo far, therefore, from endeavouring to root it out, that we should rather make it our business to keep it up and cherish it. Our chief care must be to fix this, as well as our other passions. upon proper objects, and to direct it to a right end.

For this reason, as I have ever shewn myself a friend to honourable Love, I have constantly discountenanced all vicious passions. Though the feveral forts of these are each of them highly

Je 36

flav

ad i head

ng, . hur

hild han

had f riend

tory,

o stif

defire

of th

weak

lid,

ittem

much hours

he f

houg

amil enteri

his: e

he o

with conce

despa

once

proac

highly criminal, yet that which leads us to defile another man's bed is by far of the blackest dye.

The excellent author of "The whole Duty of Man" has given us a very lively picture of this crime, with all those melancholy circumstances that must necessarily attend it. One must indeed wonder to see it punished so lightly among civilized nations, when even the most barbarous have regarded it with the utmost horror and detestation. I was lately entertained with a story to this purpose, which was told me by one of my friends who was himself upon the place when the thing happened.

In an out plantation, upon the borders of Potuxen, a river in Maryland, there lived a planter, who was master of a great number of negro flaves. The increase of these poor creatures is always an advantage to the planters, their children being born flaves; for which reason the owners are very well pleafed, when any of them marry. Among these negroes there happened to be two, who had always lived together and contracted an intimate friendship, which went on for feveral years in an uninterrupted course. Their joys and their griefs were mutual; their confidence in each other was intire; distrust and fuspicion were passions they had no notion of. The one was a batchelor; the other married to a flave

His

s us to blackeft

t. One lightly ne most utmost ertained told me pon the

of Poa planof negro etures is eir chilfon the of them appened her and ch went course.

ruft and ion of. rried to a flave flave of his own complexion, by whom he and several children. It happened that the head of this small family rose early one mornng, on a leifure day, to go far into the woods hunting, in order to entertain his wife and hildren at night with some provisions better han ordinary. The batchelor flave, it feems. had for a long time entertained a passion for his. riend's wife; which, from the fequel of the tory, we may conclude, he had endeavoured o stifle, but in vain. The impatience of his lefires prompted him to take this opportunity. of the husband's absence, to practise upon the weakness of the woman; which accordingly he lid, and was fo unfortunate as to fucceed in his ttempt. The hunter, who found his prey nuch nearer home than usual, returned some hours fooner than was expected, loaden with he spoils of the day, and full of the pleasing houghts of featting and rejoicing, with his amily, over the fruits of his labour. Upon his intering his shed, the first objects that struck his eyes were his wife and his friend afleep in the embraces of each other. A man acquainted with the passions of human nature will easily conceive the assonishment, the rage, and the despair, that overpowered the poor Indian at once: he burst out into lamentations and reproaches; and tore his hair like one distracted.

; their

His cries and broken accents awakened the guilty couple; whose shame and confusion were equal to the agonies of the injured. After a confiderable pause of filence on both fides, he expostulated with his friend in terms like these: My wrongs are greater than I am able to express; and far too great for me to bear. My wife -but I blame not her. After a long and lafting friendship, exercised under all the hardships and severities of a most irksome captivity; after mutual repeated instances of affection and fidelity; could I suspect my friend, my bosom-friend, should prove a traitor? I thought myself happy, even in bondage, in the enjoyment of fuch a friend and fuch a wife; but cannot bear the thoughts of life with liberty, after having been fo basely betrayed by both. You both are lost to me, and I to you. I foon shall be at rest; live and enjoy your crime. Adieu." Having faid this, he turned away and went out, with a resolution to die immediately. The guilty negro followed him, touched with the quickeft fense of remorse for his treachery. " It is I alone, (faid he) that am guilty; and I alone, who am not fit to live. Let me intreat you to forgive your wife, who was overcome by my importunities. I promise never to give either of you the least disquiet for the future: live, and be happy hap)

Bear row
wep
out

Nº 3

for r feeli upor have in to

of a

feder from note the land the land one their fuch

NOW

Nº 36.

d the

were fter a

es, he

hefe:

to ex-

y wife

afting

os and

r mulelity;

riend,

арру,

uch a

ar the

been

re lost

t reft:

laving with a guilty

nickest

alone,

ho am

orgive

mpor-

of you nd be happy

happy together, and think of me no more. Bear with me but for this night; and to morrow you shall be fatisfied." Here they both wept, and parted. When the husband went out in the morning to his work, the first thing he saw was his friend hanging upon the bough of a tree before the cabbin-door.

If the wretches of this nation, who set up for men of wit and gallantry, were capable of feeling the generous remorse of this poor slave, upon the like occasions, we should, I fear, have a much thinner appearance of equipage in town.

Methinks there should be a general confederacy amongst all honest men to exclude from society, and to brand with the blackest note of infamy, those miscreants, who make it the business of their lives to get into families, and to estrange the affections of the wife from the husband. There is something so very base and so inhuman in this modish wickedness, that one cannot help wishing the honest liberty of the "Ancient Comedy" were restored; and that offenders in this kind might be exposed by their names in our public theatres. Under such a discipline, we should see those, who now glory in the ruin of deluded women, reduced

Nº

tho

tra

fix will as hav of rec

OCC

giv

pai lon

wr

cee

is f

tur

wħ

mu

any

per thi

Max

par !

duced to withdraw themselves from the just resentments of their countrymen and fellowcitizens.

N° 37. Thursday, May 20, 1714.

What pains, what racking thoughts he proves, Who lives remov'd from her he loves!

CONGREVE.

has made me extremely sensible of all the distresses occasioned by Love. I have often reslected what could be the cause, that while we see the most worthless part of mankind every day succeeding in their attempts, while we see those wretches, whose hearts are utterly incapable of this noble passion, appear stupid and senseless amidst the caresses of the fair; we cannot but observe, that the noblest and greatest slames which have been kindled in the breasts of men of sense and merit have seldom met with due return.

As

N° 36. just llow-

REVE.

PAGE

of all

often

while

every

we fee

ly ind and

; we

reatest

n met

As the thoughts of those who have been thoroughly in Love are frequently wild and extravagant, I have been sometimes tempted to think that Providence, never designing we should fix our thoughts of happiness altogether here, will not allow us to taste so large a share of it as we must necessarily do in the enjoyment of an object on which all the passions of our soul have been placed, and to which all the faculties of our mind have been long aspiring.

It is certain, however, that, without having recourse to a superior Power, there are several accidents which naturally happen on these occasions, and from whence we may generally give a pretty good account why the greatest passions are usually unsuccessful. It has been long fince observed, by a celebrated French writer*, that it is much easier for a man to succeed who only feigns a passion, than for one who is truly and desperately in Love. The first is still master of himself, and can watch all the turns and revolutions in the temper of her whom he would engage. The latter is too much taken up with his own passion, to attend any thing elfe; it is with difficulty he can even perfuade himfelf to speak, when he finds every thing he can fay fo thort of what he feels, and

As

that

^{*} M. Le Duc de la ROCHEFOUCAULT, "Reflexions & Maximes Morales." Edit. Amst. 1772. Avec des Commentaires, par M. MANZON, 800, p. 68.

fo

th

un

m

to fhi

OW

im

up

otl

of

to

ing

wh

of

ful

pai

tho

you

lux

nif

hot

the

of

pol

bre

im

that his conceptions are too tender to be expressed by words. The fair, generally speak. ing, are not sufficiently sensible of the value they ought to put upon fuch a passion, nor consider how strong that Love must be which shall throw the most eloquent into the utmost confusion before them. FLAVIA is an unhappy instance of what I am observing; she was courted at once by Tom TRIFLE, and OCTAVIO; the first could entertain her with his Love, with the fame indifference he talked on any other occasion, and with great ferenity of mind make a digression from what he was faying, either to play with her lap-dog, or give his opinion of a fuit of OCTAVIO, when Fortune favoured him with an opportunity of declaring himself, was often struck speechless in the midst of a sentence, and could for some time express himself no other way than by preffing her hand and dropping a tear. FLAVIA, having duly weighed the merit of both, married TRIFLE. His unkindness to her after marriage, his inability for any thing of bufiness, and carelessin relation to his fortune, foon plunged her into fo many unhappy circumstances, that she had long fince funk noder the weight of them, had she not been constantly supported by the interest and affiftance of the generous Octavio.

But;

Vº 37.

e ex-

peak.

they

nfider

throw

on be-

ice of

once

could

ne in-

, and reffion

with uit of

d him

f, was a fen-

imself

d and eighed

lis unity for n rela-

nto fo

d long

ad she

nterest

But, befides the reasons I have already affigned for the ill success of the most deserving passions, there is one which I must not omit. unhappiness of too many women of fortune and merit (from a distrust of their own judgment) to submit themselves entirely to the direction of others, and rely too much on those friendships they have contracted with some of their These female acquaintance either own fex. immediately form some defign of their own upon them, in order to accomplish which every other proposal is discouraged, or from a spice of envy, too incident to the fex, cannot endure to see them ardently beloved, or think of having them pass their days in the arms of a man who they are fenfible would make it the bufiness of his life to oblige them.

I have been led more particularly into the subject of my present Paper by the unhappy passion of poor Philander. PHILANDER, though of an age which the greatest part of our youth think fit to waste in all the excesses of luxury and debauchery, has laid it out in furnishing his mind with the most noble and manly notions of wisdom and virtue. He has not at the same time forgot to make himself master of all those little accomplishments which the polite have agreed to think necessary for a wellbred man; and is equally qualified for the most important affairs, or the most gay conversation. S 2 A per-

But;

Nº 37.

A perfect knowledge of the world has made him for a long time look with the utmost contempt on that infipid part of the female fex. who are skilled in nothing but dress and vanity. His heart remained untouched amidft a thoufand beauties, till a particular accident first brought him to the knowledge of the lovely, the virtu-EMILIA, with a fortune that ous EMILIA. might command the vanities of life, has shewn that she has a mind infinitely above them. Her beauty serves but as the varnish to her virtues; while, with a graceful innocence peculiar to her, the declares, that, if ever the becomes a wife, the has no ambition to be a gaudy flave, but shall prefer substantial happiness to empty shew. PHILANDER faw and loved her with a passion equal to so much desert: his birth and fortune must have entitled him at least to a favourable hearing, had not his love given the alarm to the defigns of a she friend. There is something at all times highly barbarous in asperfing the absent, even where the case is doubtful; but the malicious creature, who takes it upon her to be EMILIA's directress, is foolish enough to charge PHILANDER with being deficient in those very things for which he is more remarkably conspicuous: as I am a constant patron to virtuous Love, I am in hopes however, that, should this Paper reach EMILIA, the will be fo just to herself fer co

de

an

.1

Engo

thr mo

'I

· y

herself, to be her own judge in a cause of this consequence; since, as a celebrated author observes, it is very certain, that a generous and constant passion, in an agreeable Lover, is the greatest blessing that can happen to the most deserving of her sex; and, if overlooked in one, may perhaps never after be found in another.

Nº 38. Saturday, May 22, 1714.

-Scribere just amor.

OVID.

I Shall make this Paper confift of one or two letters. The first is from Philander to Emilia, but was probably intercepted by the good-natured directress whom I mentioned in my last. There is so much Love and Sincerity through the whole, as must have affected the most stubborn temper.

PHILANDER to EMILIA.

MADAM,

'If you judge of my passion only by what 'I said, when I had last the honour to see you, 'you very much injure a heart like mine, that made confex, anity.

Nº 37.

ufand ought virtuthat

Her tues; o her, wife, but shew.

oaffion ortune urable rm to ething g the

; but on her igh to those kably hould uft to herfelf

Nº

5 E

s n

6]:

f t

· f

· I

6 y

6 I

· f

. 0

· r

.

•]

la

re

is filled with sentiments too lively, too tender to be expressed. I hardly know indeed what I said. What I very well remember is, that 'I was all Love, and all confusion, that I found it more difficult to speak before the woman I was born to admire, than I have formerly done before the largest affemblies.

At the same time I must confess, I was not a little amazed at being fo often interrupted by a creature, whom the most common rules f of civility ought to have kept at a much greater distance. I must own, Madam, I was perfectly at a loss how to behave myself on fuch an occasion; and whether I ought to flifle my refentments, or give way to them, while I was fo near a person whom I had f rather die than offend.

'As to the business of fortune between us, I have no other proposal to make, but that I may put my whole estate into the hands of your counsel, to be settled after any manner which you think will make you most easy.

I hope I have long fince refolved that my carriage shall be such, if ever I have the honour to be called your husband, as shall unite our interests by the surest tie, I mean that of affection. Give me leave to affure you, Madam, with a freedom which I think myself obliged to use on so serious an occasion, that even as beautiful

N° 38, tender what that found oman I y done rupted n rules much I was felf on ght to

I had us, I that I ands of

nanner
It easy, ny carnonour
ite our f affec-

ladam, bliged
ven as autiful

beautiful as you are, I could never be contented with your person without your heart. All I defire is, that I may have leave to try if my utmost endeavours to please and deserve vou, can make any impression on it. I only beg I may be allowed to explain myself at large on this head, though at the same time, to confess the truth, Madam, I cannot help entertaining a vain hope, that Providence had a much more than ordinary influence in my first seeing you, and that I shall act with so ' much truth and fincerity in my pretenfions to you, as may possibly move you to think, that, though I can never fully deserve you, I am ' much too fincere to be flighted. Vouchsafe. 'Madam, to hear me; and either root out this ' foolish notion by a frank and generous denial, for bless me with an opportunity of dedicating my whole life to your fervice, and doing whatever the heart of man can be inspired with, when it is filled at once with Gratitude and Love. I am, Madam, with infinite paffion,

Your most devoted,

' most obedient, humble fervant, &c.'

The next letter was fent me last week by a lady whose case is truly deplorable, if it is really such as she here represents it. I shall in-

8 4

fert

fert it, as the defires, for the fake of the moral at the end of it.

SIR.

I AM perhaps the most unfortunate woman My story in short is this. CINTHIOpardon those tears that will fall upon this Paper at the fight of his name-I would tell you that I was long and paffionately beloved by him-but how can I describe the greatness, the fincerity of his passion! what pains did he not take, what method did he omit, to fhew how much he valued me? I must have been the worst, the most foolish of my sex, to have been insensible to so much truth, and I loved the dear, the unhappy youth, merit. with a passion not inferior to his own; but, out of a foolish referve, which our filly fex feldom know when they ought to keep up, and when lay afide, I rather chose to receive his meffages, and fend him his answers, by a female confidante, than to fee him myfelf. DORIA (for fo I shall call the wretch) had long been a common friend to us both; she had a thousand times talked to me of CINTHIO with all those praises he so truly deserved; when one day she came to me, and with a feeming anguish of mind told me, that CINTHIO " was the worst of men, and had basely betrayed " me." Nº 38. me.

can ac I fha

fat t

cum: me l

f lievi

'my i VOW.

from

by h who

no f my

for f

Rag

' myf was

f him

me. f near

eyes THI

tear ·I f am ' fucl

of. qui

38.

oral man 0-Patell ved eatains t, to nave fex. and uth, but, fex up, eive by a felf. had fhe was ayed ne." me." It would be too tedious to give you an account of the fact the charged him with. I shall only inform you, that there happened at that time to be fo many unlucky circumftances, which made what she had told me look like truth, that I could not help beflieving her. She found the way to work up my paffion to fuch a height, that I made a yow never to fee him or receive a meffage from him more; and within a formight after. by her instigation, took a man for my husband whom I could neither love, nor hate. I was no fooner married, than I was fully convinced my CINTHIO had been abused. After I had for some days endured the tharpest pangs of Rage, Defpair, Jealoufy, and Love, I composed 'myself just enough to send him word that'I was fatisfied of his innocence; but conjured him, if he had ever loved, to avoid feeing 'me. I was this afternoon obliged to go to a near relation's. The first person I fixed my 'eyes on when I came into the room was CYN-THIO, who immediately burst into a flood of tears, made a low bow, and retired.

OIHT hen ning

I had much ado to forbear fainting, but am got home, and am this moment enduring ' fuch torments as no words can give a notion 'of. I am undone; but, before my fenses are quite loft, I fend you this, that it may for the future

future be observed as a constant rule by my unhappy sex, "Never to condemn a Lover, however guilty he may at first appear, till they have at least given him an opportunity of justifying himself." I am, Sir,

The most unhappy of women,

. J. C.

N° 39

CI

Da

tunate

Love

by m repair

of go

than refine

ftruct

vanta

He g felf a world

In the

fplee

make will,

paffic

his n

W

P. S. I had like to have omitted informing you, that when I fent a letter, in the anguish of my foul, to the wretch above described, to defire I might know why she had ruined me,

I received the following answer:

" Dear JENNY,

"THE fellow you mention talked so per-

" petually about you, and took fo little notice " of any body elfe, that I could at last m

" longer endure him. I plainly forefaw, that if you had ever come together, you would "have been company for none but yourselves

"for which reason, I took care to have you

" marry a man with whom, if I am not mil

" taken, you may live as other women generally and undones but, before my tenier are

" do with husbands.

a svig on show on a same yours, &c.

Tuefdy

by my Lover, ear, till ortunity

omen,

J. C. forming guish of bed, to ned me, fo pere notice

last no w, that would arfelves;
ave you not mis

rs, &c.

enerally

uefda

N° 39. Tuesday, May 25, 1714.

Nec verbum verbo curabis reddere fidus Interpres ----

HOR.

SINCE I have given public notice of my abode, I have had many visits from unfortunate fellow-sufferers who have been crossed in Love as well as myself.

WILL WORMWOOD, who is related to me by my mother's fide, is one of those who often repair to me for my advice. WILL is a fellow of good sense, but puts it to little other use than to torment himself. He is a man of so refined an understanding, that he can set a construction upon every thing to his own disadvantage, and turn even a civility into an affront. He groans under imaginary injuries, finds himfelf abused by his friends, and fancies the whole world in a kind of combination against him. In fhort, poor WORMWOOD is devoured with the spleen: you may be sure a man of this humour makes a very whimfical Lover. Be that as it will, he is now over head and ears in that passion, and, by a very curious interpretation of his mistress's behaviour, has in less than three months

6 A

min

with

who

to l

me

plai

care

kiff

all

feaf

who cou

hap

bee

bee

dea

and am thir

W

acq

of

to

months reduced himself to a perfect skeleton, As her fortune is inferior to his, fhe gives him all the encouragement another man could wift, but has the mortification to find that her Lover still fours upon her hands. WILL is diffatis. fied with her, whether she smiles or frowns upon him; and always thinks her either too referred, A kind word, that would make or too coming. another Lover's heart dance for joy, pangs poor WILL, and makes him lie awake all night-As I was going on with WILL WORM. wood's amour, I received a present from my bookseller, which I found to be " The Characters of Theophrastus, translated from the Greek into English by Mr. Budgell*."

It was with me as, I believe, it will be with all who look into this translation: when I had begun to peruse it, I could not lay it by, till I had gone through the whole book; and was agreeably furprized to meet with a chapter in it, intituled, "A Discontented Temper," which gives a livelier picture of my cousin Wormwood, than that which I was drawing for him myself. It is a follows:

[&]quot;The Moral Characters of Theophrastus. Translated from the Greek, by Eustace Budgell, Esq." Second Edit 12mo. 1714. Dr., Johnson says, "ADDISON has recommended this book, and was suspected to have revised, if he did not write it." Dr. Johnson's "Lives of English Poets." Vol. II. p. 375, Ed. 8vo, 1781. Probably ADDISON was the author of this Paper of the LOVER, No 39.

G H A P. XVII.

· A Discontented Temper.

A discontented temper is, " A frame of mind which fets a man upon complaining without reason." When one of his neighbours. who makes an entertainment, fends a fervant to him with a plate of any thing that is nice, 'What," fays he, " your mafter did not think me good enough to dine with him?" He complains of his mistress at the very time she is careffing him; and when she redoubles her kisses and endearments, "I wish," says he, 'all this came from your heart!" In a dry feafon he grumbles for want of rain; and, when a shower falls, mutters to himself, "Why could not this have come fooner?" If he happens to find a purse of money, " Had it been a pot of gold," fays he, " it would have been worth stooping for." He takes a great deal of pains to beat down the price of a flave; and after he has paid his money for him, "I 'am fure," fays he, "thou art good for nothing, or I should not have had thee so cheap." When a messenger comes with great joy to acquaint him that his wife is brought to bed. of a fon, he answers, "That is as much as to fay, friend, I am poorer by half to day keleton. ves him ld wish, r Lover

Nº 39

diffatisens upon eferved, ld make

Pangs
wake all
Worm
om my Charac-

e Greek be with on I had ill I had greeably atituled, s a live-han that It is as Translated cond Edit ommended he did not he Poets.'

HAR

Nº 39

often find (

tongu

in the

phraf

made into 1

as we

fhort

tus i

very lator

geniu

cerne

and e

in b

being

and h

or cr

fonab

phra

and i

in th

lator

quali

be fo

reade

touc

As

than I was yesterday." Though he has gained a cause with costs and damages, he complains that his counsel did not insist upon the most material points. If, after any misfortune has befallen him, his friends raise a voluntary contribution for him, and desire him to be merry, "How is that possible?" says he,

when I am to pay every one of you his ' money again, and be obliged to you into the bargain!"

The instances of a discontented temper which Theophrastus has here made use of, like those which he singles out to illustrate the rest of his characters, are chosen with the greatest nicety, and full of humour. His strokes are always fine and exquisite, and though they are not sometimes violent enough to affect the imagination of a coarse reader, they cannot but give the highest pleasure to every man of a refined taste, who has a thorough insight into human nature.

As for the translation, I have never seen any of a prose author which has pleased me more. The gentleman, who has obliged the public with it, has followed the rule which Horace has laid down for translators, by preserving every where the life and spirit of his author, without servilely copying after him word for word. This is what the French, who have most distinguished themselves by performances of this nature, so often

ained

olains

most

e has ntary to be

s he,

o the

vhich

those

eft of

eatest

s are

they

t the

t but

of a

into

any nore.

or credit to himself.

often inculcate when they advise a translator to find out fuch particular elegances in his own tongue as bear fome analogy to those he fees in the original, and to express himself by such phrases as his author would probably have made use of, had he written in the language into which he is translated. By this means, as well as by throwing in a lucky word or a fhort circumstance, the meaning of Theophraftus is all along explained, and the humour very often carried to a greater height. A translator who does not thus confider the different genius of the two languages in which he is concerned, with fuch parallel turns of thoughts. and expression as correspond with one another in both of them, may value himself upon being a faithful interpreter; but in works of wit and humour will never do justice to his author,

As this is every where a judicious and a reafonable liberty, I fee no chapter in Theophrastus where it has been so much indulged, and in which it was so absolutely necessary, as in the character of the Sloven. I find the translator himself, though he has taken pains to qualify it, is still apprehensive that there may be something too gross in the description. The reader will see with how much delicacy he has touched upon every particular, and cast into with s laid where t fer-This iished re, so often

272

shades every thing that was shocking in so naufeous a figure.

Mount ye the C H A P. XIX. aved propably have

A SLOVEN.

SLOVENLINESS is fuch a neglect of a man's person, as makes him offensive to other people. The Sloven comes into company with a dirty pair of hands, and a fet of long nails at the end of them, and tells you, for an excuse, that his father and grandfather used to do fo before him. However, that he may out-go his fore-fathers, his fingers are covered with warts of his own raising. He is as hairy as a goat, and takes care to let you fee it. His teeth and breath are perfectly well fuited to one another. He lays about him at table after a very extraordinary manner, and takes 'in a meal at a mouthful; which he feldom disposes of without offending the company. In drinking he generally makes more hafte than good speed. When he goes into the bath, you may eafily find him out by the scent of his oil, and diftinguish him when he is dressed by the spots in his coat. He does not fland upon decency in conversation, but will talk smut, though a priest and his mother be

Nº 39 in th

" most

falls he b

over

· long,

never and,

one b

' hind

The membr Lord R

None But w

lf a represe worft 1 mer Er years f

SI

Bruyer

neglig he be of a other with nails

To 39.

nau-

exed to may vered hairy His ed to table takes 1dom

pany. hafte o the

fcent he is

es not t will er be

in in

in the room. He commits a blunder in the most solemn offices of devotion and afterwards falls a laughing at it. At a confort of music he breaks in upon the performance, hums over the tune to himself, ot, if he thinks it long, afks the muficians, "Whether they will never have done?" He always spits at random, and, if he is at an entertainment, it is ten to one but it is upon the fervant who stands be-' hind him.'

The foregoing translation brings to my remembrance that excellent observation of my Lord Roscommon's *.

None yet have been with admiration read, But who (beside their learning) were well-bred.

If after this the reader can endure the filthy representation of the same figure exposed in its worst light, he may see how it looks in the former English version, which was published some years fince, and is done from the French of Bruyere.

· Nastiness or Slovenliness.

'SLOVENLINESS is a lazy and beaftly negligence of a man's own person, whereby he becomes so fordid, as to be offensive to Effay on Translated Verfe.

those

those about him. You will see him come in. to company when he is covered all over with a leprofy and fourf, and with very long nails, and fays, those distempers were hereditary, that his father and grandfather had them before him. He has ulcers in his thighs, and boils upon his hands, which he takes no care to have cured, but lets them run on till they are gone beyond remedy. His arm-pits are all hairy, and most part of his body like a wild beaft. His teeth are black and rotten, which makes his breath stink so that you cannot endure him to come nigh you; he will also snuff up his nose and spit it out as he eats, and uses to speak with his mouth crame med full, and lets his victuals come out at both corners. He belches in the cups as he is drinking, and uses nasty stinking oil in the bath. He will intrude into the best company ' in fordid ragged cloaths. If he goes with his mother to the footh-fayers, he cannot then refrain from wicked and prophane expressions. When he is making his oblations at the temple, he will let the dish drop out of his hands, and fall a-laughing, as if he had done fome brave exploit. At the finest concert of mufick he cannot forbear clapping his hands, and making a rude noise; will pretend to fing along with them, and fall a-railing at them N° 39 to le upor

I ca that, i take the Roman this, v bookfe work f foon b differen lish an

N° 40

With a verses, instilled this no

to 39:

in-

with ails,

ary,

be-

and

care

they

s are

ke a

tten,

can-

will as he cramut at as he n the apany th his then

Tions.

t the

done ert of

ands,

o fing

them

f to

to leave off. Sitting at table, he spits full upon the servants who waited there.'

I cannot close this Paper without observing, that, if gentlemen of leisure and genius would take the same pains upon some other Greek or Roman author, that has been bestowed upon this, we should no longer be abused by our booksellers, who set their hackney-writers at work for so much a sheet. The world would soon be convinced, that there is a great deal of difference between putting an author into English and translating him.

Nº 40. Thursday, May 27, 1714.

Debistate vires ---

VIRO.

THE bosom into which Love enters inclines the person who is inspired with it, with a goodness towards all with whom he converses, more extensive than even that which is instilled by Charity. I pretend to so much of this noble passion, as seldom to overlook the excellences.

excellences of other men; and I forgive Mrs. Page all the pangs my paffion has given me, fince, though I am never to have her, all other persons are become more agreeable to me, from the large good-will, the beginning of which I owe to the admiration of her. There are no excellences of mind or body, in any person that comes before me, which escape my observation, and I take great pleasure in divulging my sense of them.

I must confess, entertainments of the neighbouring theatre frequently engage my evenings: I do not take it to be a condescension, that some of my Papers are but paraphrases upon play-bills. I have grown old in the obfervation of the feats of activity and genius for intelligent movements, which I have always loved in my old acquaintance Jo. PRINCE, who is to entertain us on Monday next with feveral new inventions, wherein he has expressed the compass and variety of his excellent talent. One of those diversions he calls "The Rattle," from the harlequin, irregular, and comic movements with which it is performed; another, which he hath termed "The Looby," is performed by himself, bearing a prong, and Mrs. BICKNALL managing a rake with as much beauty (though not as a little higher dancing) as an Arcadian shep-against herdefs. The next dance he will give us is ancient very aptly called "The Innocent," to be persend to formed

Nº 40 form ment, prefer chara

Th contri linkbo imagi

His gure d gentle from a tyle o

But

former differen much of a Po mentio has had net wi agacio begin 1 gainst of their 10 40. Mrs. fince, rions large

o the ces of efore

imagined. take

em. neighevennfion, hrases e ob. us for lways , who Several

' from

formed

formed by Mrs. Younger, a genteel movement, confisting of a farabrand and jigg, to represent both the simplicity and gaiety of that character.

The fourth act will be followed by a motion contrived to represent the midnight mirth of linkboys: the dance is very humorous, and well

His play concludes with what they call a "Figure dance," performed by an elegant affembly of gentlemen and ladies, and is as much different from any of the preceding movements, as the tyle of a poem is above that of a ballad.

But I must turn my thoughts from this performer to a person who has also diverted many different generations on the theatre, but in a much higher sphere; to wit, in the character of a Poet. The person whom I am about to ed the mention is the celebrated Mr. D'URFEY, who One has had the fate of all great authors, to have ments agacious part of mankind (as foon as they ich he begin to grow conspicuous) ward themselves ed by gainst the envious, by representing the nobility hough not as well defend the writings of my friend spainst the malice of criticks, by shewing how us is ancient a gentleman he is from whom they prepe per send to detract. I will undertake to show those

who

Nº 40.

of or

fertili

in Af

are li man

idea l

fifty

· Euro

have

· lieve

the f

char:

' profe

and i

is th

(Card

4 &c.

· prep dern

finif

tome!

' own

four mat

ven!

tion

year

. 0

· W for t

who pretend to cavil at my friend's writings, that his ancestors made a greater figure in the world, nay in the learned world, than their own.

Monfieur PERRAULT, the famous French Aca. demist, in his Memoirs of the Worthies of France, gives this testimony of the house of D'URFEY,

' HONORIUS D'URFEY,' fays he, 'cadet of the illustrious house of D'URFEY, in the province of Forrest, was chosen Knight of Malta, and discharged the devoirs of his profession with all the bravery, and all the exactness it could require.

He had two brothers, the eldest of which married the heiress of Chatteaumorant; but the marriage afterwards being declared null, by reason of his insufficiency, he became re-Iligious, and died Prior of Mount-verdon, and Dean of the Chapter of St. JOHN DE MOUNT.

BRISSON.

'The fecond brother was master of the horse to the Duke of Savoy, and lived to be above one hundred years old.

' Honorius was very much admired for many noble and witty performances; but what prinf cipally obliges us to put him into the number of of Nº 40, itings, in the their

Aca. nies of use of det of e pro-Malta, feffion ness it which ; but null, ne ren, and OUNT.

horfe above

many 6 of prinmber

of our illustrious men, was the beauty and fertility which appears with fo much splendor in Aftrea, the romance he has left us, in which are lively pictures of all the conditions of human life, in fo genuine a manner, that the idea he gives of them, has not only for above fifty years past, charmed all France, but all Europe.

Whatever veneration we are obliged to have for the admirable poems of Homer, which have been the delight of all ages; yet, I believe, it may be faid, that to confider them on the score of invention, manners, passion, and character, Monfieur D'URFEY's Astrea, though profe, deserves no less the name of a poem, and is not in the least inferior to Homer's: this is the judgement of very learned men, viz. Cardinal Richelieu, Mr. WALLER, COWLEY, &c. and those, who have been very much prepoffest for the ancients against the moderns.

'Of this excellent romance we mention, tho' 'finished by another (he dying before the last ' tome was written), yet he left enough from his 'own hand to establish his fame; nor was it found to be meerly romance, but an enig-'matical contexture of his own principal ad-'ventures, before he set out for his noble sta-'tion at Malta, where he remained several years.

· He

He had conceived a Love for Mademoifelle de Chatteaumorant, sole heiress of her family, beautiful, rich and haughty, but of that noble haughtiness which is commonly inspired by f great virtues; in his absence, she was married to his eldest brother, more upon a political account than any united affection, as will thus f appear.

The houses of D'URFEY and CHATTEAU.

f MORANT, the two greatest of the whole province, were always at enmity with one another, and their interests had divided all the nobility f of the country, fo that the parents on both fides were willing by this alliance to dry up the fource of the quarrels and misfortunes, which usually happend every moment.

D'URFEY, at his return from Malta, found his mistress married to his brother, yet still he could not cease to love her; and in all likelihood was not ignorant of his fecret defect, who, after ten years marriage confessing at last his impotence, was divorced; and then the · Chevalier (obtaining a dispensation of his vow) s after he had furmounted several difficulties, efpoused Mademoiselle CHATTEAUMORANT.

These adventures gave occasion to those of Celadon, Silvander, Aftrea, and Diana, who

f are the mystical images of them; divers affairs of persons of the best quality at court, in his finge

Nº 40.

the

oug 1

f uncl

· feer fom

' gent

by l ried the e defe

of t

The but the who but as no de land, collate fo tha

ticula

Nº 40. time, having also furnished matter for the ingenious construction of the work.

So far PERRAULT.

SEVERINUS D'URFEY, his near kinfman. the before mentioned Chevalier being his great funcle, for the extravagancy of his youth, or fome other reason which has always been a feeret to those about him, was difinherited fome time before he came into England: where being excellently well gifted in all gentleman-like qualities, though undoing all by his immoderate vice of gaming, he married a gentlewoman of Huntingdonshire, of the family of the MARMIONS, from whom descended THOMAS D'URFEY, the ornament of this Paper.

There feems to be no blot in this pedigree, but that of the infufficiency of the gentleman who married the heiress of Chatteaumorant; but as he could by reason of that defect have no descendants, the heralds of Germany, Scotland, and Wales, all agree, that infufficiency in a collateral line cannot affect the heirs general; fo that thus my friend and his writings are fafe against the most malicious criticks in this particular.

Monsieur

mily, noble ed by arried litical Ithus

Nº 40,

oifelle

TEAUproother, bility both y up unes, found ill he ikeliefect, t last the vow) lties, T.

fe of

who

ffairs

n his ime,

ALDRICALT.

Monsieur Menage reports, that the D'UR. FEYS descended from the Emperors of Constantinople on the father's side, and the Vice. roy of Naples on the mother's. I shall put Menage's words by way of advertisement at the end of my to-day's work. This long account I have inserted, that the ignorant of Mr. D'URFEY's quality, may know how to receive him, when on the seventh of next month he shall appear (as he designs), in honour of the ladies, to speak an oration by way of prologue to "The Richmond Heiress."

That gentleman has fo long appeared in the cities of London and Westminster, attended only by one fervant, and him all along under age, that the generality have too familiar a conception of him; but it is to be hoped, that the ladies, for whose fake only he appears in public, will smile upon him, as if he himself were a Knight of Malta, and receive him as if they beheld Honorius and Severinus in their professed fervant Thomas D'URFEY. It is recommended to all the fine spirits, and beautiful ladies, to possess themselves of Mr. D'URFEY's tickets, left a further account, which we shall shortly give of his family and merit, may make the generality purchase them, and exclude those whom he most defires for his audience.

Extract

nom Lasc Mar

Nº 4

vous Cote

cêtre. vôtre fils r

pauv exem ni l'E

* M troduce frequent on all of ferve h gratefu paffim, N° 82, Nº 40.

'UR-

Con-Vice-

put nt at

g ac-

Mr.

eceive

th he

of the

logue

in the

d only

age,

oncep-

ublic,

were a

f they

r pro-

is re-

autiful RFEY's e shall make e those

Extract from MENAGE.

MESSIRE d'Urfey se noment Lascuris en leur nom de family, et pretendent etre issus des Anciens Lascuris Empereurs de Constantinople, le dernier Marquis d'Urfey qui avoit epouse une dalegre, disoit a son fils qui etoit exempt des Gardes, Mon fils, vous avez de grands Examples a suivre tant du Cote Paternel que Maternel: de mon Cote vos Ancêtres etoient Empereurs d'Orient; et du Cote de vôtre Mere, vous venes de Vicerois de Naples. Le fils repondit, Il faut, Monsieur, que ce soient de pauvres gens, de n'avoir pu faire qu'un miserable exempt de Gardes, d'ou vient qu'ils ne m'ont laist ni l'Empire ni leur Viceroyaute*.

* Mr. THOMAS D'URFEY had often the honour to be introduced into STEELE'S writings, who made him not unfrequently the subject of his polite raillery, though he discovers on all occasions a sciendship for him, and a sincere disposition to serve him, of which D'URFEY appears to have had the most grateful sensibility to the end of his life. See TAT. with Notes, passim, particularly No 43; and GUARDIAN, No 29, No 67, No 82, and Notes.

Extract

THE

R

ASVOJET.

. state of the rest from the state of

Sunt of Popular Color

the state of the s at the property of the rest of the state of the er dien. It finde seingeber in gest sei gestet der er einen derstätelte den Samphil un miller die processed in and a restrict to be to the following personal transfers Harbert Wall and Japaneses was the first of the contract of the contract tions - real from their transfer of the

Nº 1

thin of the thou take be in the

who

Lov

who were work of its

01 11

THE

READER*.

No 1. Thursday, April 22, 1714.

Semper ego auditor tantum ?-

JUV.

AM a man that have READ myself almost blind, and find by a modest calculation of things, that it is as wonderful how the scribblers of this age live, as how the ale-houses subsist, though almost every house is a victualler's. I take this circumstance of the tippling-places to be in some measure attributed to the justices of the peace, who as well to oblige their clerks, who have so much a licence, as to let no one who is a stranger in town want accommodation—

The READER was published by STERLE, in opposition to the Examiner. It was re-printed more than once, with The Lover, in one volume 12mo.; and a small number of copies were printed in a large 8vo. fize, to compleat a set of the author's works; and the same method has been followed on this occasion of its re-publication, with Notes, and Illustrations.

But

But I have run this simile too far to be like what I was going to liken it to; and shall therefore proceed, without minding that, to give an account to the Public before whom I appear, why

I appear at all.

You must know I have a long time frequented coffee houses and Read Papers, and spent my money upon coffee for the advantage of Reading the Papers; though the coffee and the papers also are meer dryers, and do but hinder my natural capacity by a forced liveliness as to the coffee, and a false gravity as to the Papers; for as to the former, I have afterwards found myself dispirited thereby; as to the latter, misled rather than enlightened.

I humbly therefore defire all who, like myfelf, have been patient or gentle Readers, to take in me, who fet up in behalf of all persons who for some time last past have been imposed upon, I mean from the beginning of the world, which is but an instant in comparison of the succeeding time—. I beg pardon, I am still but a Reader and so little used to Writing, that I have made two parentheses, if not more; so that I cannot go on, without beginning a new sentence.

I am then to let you understand, that, in confideration that all Readers have a long time been imposed upon, I step out to do all of those good Nº 1. good from charac innoce many Reade from would der th to go about I ple what two 1 Cour tion where in for order fuch that

Relig

withi

out t

by I

fpok

this

that !

dren

vhat fore acwhy freand tage the ader is to ers; und mifmyake who who oon, nich eednt a t I hat fen-een

ofe

ood

good people justice, and write things, which, from the observations I have made in the character of a Reader, have most offended that innocent part of the world. It is certain that many become Authors before they have been Readers, which has led them into much errour, from the fault of humourfome parents, who would have them learn to Write first. But under the character of Reader, I claim the liberty to go out of my way, and lay by what I am about, take a nap, or suspend my attention as I please-: but this careless behaviour to what I met with in public, first vanished from two remarkable circumstances. The "Daily Courant" of April the 15th publishes a declaration of the French king given at Versailles, wherein he renews a prohibition that had been in force for three years; I fay, he renews an order which had been fo long in force, without fuch fuccess as not to need the repetition of it, that no new converts to the Roman Catholic Religion should sell their immoveable estates within the three next fucceeding years; without the king's leave, or that of those authorized by him. I remember our papers formerly spoke another thing I am very forry for, which this good prince infitts upon, which implied that his majesty would understand all the children of his Protestant subjects, born within the dominions

and

let 1

· imp

mor

fall.

hard

then

wro

over

ftep

is o

then!

brin!

· lives

their

muf

the

and

they

richi

chur

faint

then

be j

mahe

whic

the e petu

of p

dominions of other provinces, to be under the penalties of his inland Protestants. This grieved me more than ordinary, because by the rule of taking from us one generation, and not letting the naturalization of the parents, or birth of the children, denominate those born in other nations subjects of those nations, he may take off, for aught I know, the best men of all other dominions. I am fure he might by that rule undo Great-Britain, by taking from us his greatest opponents, and our best patriots; for some etymologists and heralds say, the illustrious names of Harley, d' Harcourt, and St. Jean, are originally French. But as to the prohibition I was speaking of, to dispose of their fortunes, I took great notice, when I was a private man (like you common Readers) that a worthy prelate, author of "The History of the Reformation," in his fermon preached on last Easter Monday, March 29, has this excellent and reasonable paragraph on the subject of the danger of Popery.

'Here I have given you but a faint description of what you must all look for, when that day comes which our affertors of Hereditary Right are pleading for, and are not afraid to own (so sure, it seems, they think their defigns are laid), that even all funds must be at the mercy of the next heir, whom they look

and Nº I. the eved le of ting f the naoff, dounatest fome rious Jean, rohiforivate orthy Relast ellent

Nº I.

fcripn that ditary aid to ir debe at look

f the

and wish for; and if they are at his mercy, elet none deceive themselves with this vain and impious thought, that it will cost them no more but the changing their Religion to fave 'all. To those who have none, this will be no hard performance to feeure every thing to them; but even in this they may reckon wrong: in France a heavy jealoufy hangs still over those who fell in the hour of trial; every 'step they make is watched, their want of zeal is observed, their children are taken from them, and every information against them brings them into great trouble: fo that their bives become a burthen to them, which even their apostacy cannot secure them from. They must either over-do matters, and run into all the excesses of supererrogating superstition, and even of informing against others, or else they will be still under suspicion. The enriching of shrines and relics, the adorning churches and images, an affected devotion to faints, with the pomp of endowments, will be then the tests by which mens affections will be judged. The bare doing what is commanded will not ferve turn: the wealth with which God bleffes any must be applied to the endowing of altars, the founding of perpetual maffes, and the redemption of fouls out of purgatory. A multitude of holidays must take take men off from their labour; but processions will come in place of that, which though they impoverish the laity, yet will be turned to the enriching those who deal in that traffic.

As to the new converts mentioned above before the last quotation, I must remark, that a fellow in the coffee-house where I Read that the sale of the estates of New Converts was forbidden, said, we would not care a farthing for that, if the New Converts amongst us were forbidden to purchase. I know not what he meant by that, nor am I responsible to find out his meaning, but am at liberty to fob off my Readers, as I have when a Reader been delayed myself, till time shall discover these matters; and in the interim to say, whether I think it or not, that these matters want confirmation,

The Reader may see with what familiarity of style I treat him; but he will I hope, excuse me, when this is only to recover lost time, by imposing upon others as I have been myself, and desiring of them to bear with me as well as they have done with my predecessors in scribbling. This fayour I will deserve, by being an observer upon all that is written by other journalists, and being partial to no author but myself. The Post-boy is a considerable man; the Courant, you see, I have quoted already; the Post-man is a neuter, but against

his c

mits from

Bei printe and p hazza mende o mei be for are th noug gain,: neans he poo he ricl Lmu wing. ··W paint of-W don (where gures in an

band,

clergy are to Nº 1.

fions

they

d to

.

e beshat a

at the

for-

ng for

e for-

meant

ut his

Read.

elayed

atters;

k it or

rity of excuse

ne, by my felf

as well

Tors in

by be-tten by author

iderable

noted alt against

Nº I his conscience; the Lover is a cheat, for he is a married man; and the Flying-post has abundance of millakes, which he never commits by little and little, but is wrong or right from the beginning to the end of a Paper.

Besides this, there are abundance of books printed every day, which I shall take notice of, and put myself to the labour of Reading haphazzard, without staying till I hear them commended. This, let me tell you, is a great help o men of good estates, who are not obliged to be so exact in their Reading; and I will take are that he who talks after me, shall talk well nough for a man of quality. Let me tell you gain, this is a great matter; the rich by my heans may adorn themselves by the labours of he poor, and the poor feed by the follies of he rich; which indeed is as it should be.

I must take notice that I have Read the folwing advertisement twice or thrice repeated.

"Whereas there is a new altar piece or painting put up in the chancel of the church of White Chapel, within the diocese of London (belonging to the rector of the faid parish). wherein the traytor Judas (contrary to all figures ancient and modern) is drawn as fitting in an elbow chair, in a prieft's gown and band, and other appearances of a dignified clergyman of the church of England: these are to give notice, that if any person or per-" fons fons will discover who was the designer and director of that impious fancy, they, or either of them, shall have ten guineas reward immediately paid upon information and evidence so given, in order to prosecute any professor phane fellow concerned in it, by me

"WILLOUGHBY WILLEY."

What I have to fay to this point is, that (if the fact be true) the minister of the church, if privy to it, who fuffered it to be erected, has done a thing that is in the highest degree a scandal to his character; and has given the gentleman, whom the unchristian man is faid to have caused to be drawn in that tablet, an opportunity of imitating the most facred character that should be there in his patience, and turning the Judas upon him, who could with that supper before him, project so treacherous and base an assault upon the reputation of his brother, and consequently disappoint the effect of his ministry, which in charity he ought to believe better directed than his own.

Saturday

=

N° 2.

H

·p disabus

by the

The gr

miner.

nen are

rofs,

o need

f anot

ot tem

gainst

nto the

fter har fhamed ors.

o I. No 2.

ther imevi-

pro-

EY."

that the to be ighest

has riftian n that most in his repudifapcharity

an his

aturday

Saturday, April 24, 1714.

Virtus repulsæ nescia sordidæ Intaminatis fulget honoribus.

Hor.

THE title of my Paper may sufficiently explain the defign of it, which is chiefly to disabuse those Readers who are imposed upon by the licentious writers of this degenerate age. The greatest offender in this kind is the "Exminer." I know many fober and intelligent nen are of opinion, that his affertions are fo ross, and his falshood so visible, that there is o need of taking any notice of him: but I am f another mind; for all fuch people as have ot temper enough to reflect upon reasoning gainst him, are satisfied if more words are put nto their mouths to vent that rage, which they ave not patience to root quite out, or perhaps fter having gone fome lengths which they are hamed of, want candour to retract their erors. " The Examiner" has a great while had othing else to utter but meer words of passion;

U 3

and

and his paper, which came out this 23d of April, is written in this tafte. After putting the following words in Italic letters, at fuch diftances as he thinks are ornamental to his Pa. per, Whigs, Government, Fears, Jealousies, Peace at bome, Sedition, Suspicions, Cenfures, Murmurs, Dreams, Prophecies, Rumour, Report, Ghosts, Ap. paritions, honourable amends, and Scarecrow, he begins to be a little understood, and feems to fay that those Whigs, a people not yet of a p described by him, but in general revilings, fo that it is impossible to tell whom he means; without he says of them, that, instead of making. The atonement for their past fins, they are " still which " reviving their own shame and infamy, and but fir "ringing over the same chimes in our eass say whe without ceasing, Popery! the Pretender! Read! French Tyranny! Dunkirk not demolished! "able "Toby Butler! the Highlands! swarms of Ja"Cobites! the Catalans! the Peace! Importa"den tion of Jesuits! Invasions from Bar-le-duc! "Ton all these stale noisy topics are still slying "wou " about our ears like wild-fire wrapped up in "the "paper." Give me leave to observe, this author has put the peace in very bad company; "the and no one but he would dare to take the liberry to put it, in the most oblique way, on "ful, the same foot of being mentioned with the case " land of the Catalans, and the importation of Jesuits. " affa

But at Poper he has hereto alarmo ous pi of the any th

Nº 2.

the fu

pleafu

But

3d of Peace rmurs, ts, Ap. w, he feems

Nº 2.

But

But after the climax of diffreffes from the word Popery to the words invafions from Bar-le-duc, he has not thought fit to obviate any arguments heretofore used, that all good men should be alarmed at the growth of power in a superstitious prince, who has been formerly the patron of the Pretender: nay he is so far from doing any thing like this, that he strives to abate the pleafure men take in the hopes of the arrival ot yet of a prince from Hanover, who is the third in ilings, the succession to the crown after her majesty neans; without iffue.

naking There are many circumstances in this affair " still which make it improper to mention it at all; y, and but fince this gentleman has, or takes, leave to ar ears fay what he pleafes, I shall in behalf of all who ender! Read him, answer what he calls a few " feasonlished! "able Questions in this Juncture of Affairs."

of Ja"Would the coming of the young prince aports" demolith Dunkirk more effectually? would e-duc! "Toby Butler's recruits immediately defert? flying "would it raise the seige of Barcelona? break up in "the peace? change the nature of French this au tyranny? or reduce the exorbitant power of pany; "the Duke of Lorain? I believe they will not the li- " venture to fay, that a prince, however poweryay, on "ful, yet a subject still, would upon his first the case "landing, interpose so vigorously in public Jesuits." affairs. And if so, then it is plain, from the U 4

"these clamours, which they have so long dwelt upon, taking each particular case as their own advocates have stated it, are per, feetly groundless, and the Protestant religion is in no danger from any of these incidents; unless they would loyally and modestly insinuate, that the same things which they call grievances under her m—, would cease to be so if any of her Protestant heirs were resident among us."

Here are his questions, and reflections after them: to which I answer, that though the arrival of the Duke of Cambridge would not demolish Dunkirk, yet it would make us less fearful of the ill consequences from its being undemolished; one of which may be an attempt of imposing upon us the Pretender, whose invafion would be less dreaded, when one who is a prince of the blood was ready to fight against him, and animate all good subjects in her majesty's and his own cause against him. Toby BUTLER's recruits might not, perhaps, desert; but it would make Mr. BUTLER's promise to them, of feeing their mafter foon in these dominions, more unlikely than at present, when so valorous a prince as the Duke of Cambridge was ready to oppose him; the Duke of Cambridge, who before now has kept the field when

Nº 2. when would would the p powe reinfo the p confi and i natur orbit woul dable the h infin beha Duk that

ment
Bu
after does comi Reac
for Exam
the a after

Engl

lat all long rafe as re pereligion dents; Aly iney call eafe to ere re-

Nº 2,

s after gh the ald not us less being ttempt of e inwho is against er ma-

Toby defert; nife to efe dothen fo bridge Came field when

when the Pretender fled out of it. His arrival would not raise the fiege of Barcelona, but it would animate the befieged, that this instance of the prevalence of the cause of liberty, in so powerful a nation as Great Britain, had this reinforcement. His arrival would not break the peace, but it would make our affairs more confirmed and cemented both in time of peace. and in case of a war. It would not change the nature of a French tyranny, or reduce the exorbitant power of the Duke of Lorain; but it would certainly render them both less formidable to all who are friends to the fucceffion in the house of Hanover. After the questions, he infinuates, in his reflections above, that a bufy behaviour would not become his Grace the Duke of Cambridge: and I agree with him that it would not; but his very refidence in England would have all the good effects abovementioned.

But the Examiner discovers, immediately afterwards, that he has exceptions, which he does not think fit to speak out, against his coming at all. I, who have been a careful Reader, have observed that it has been the trick, for some time past, to let drop hints in the Examiner (which I am not to judge who gives the author) of what has been openly avowed afterwards: the way to any unwelcome circumftances

Nº 2

the.

e out

dan!

neig

· lent

as I

6 of

in cou

the the

wil.

· dig

the the

tha *

of t

of of

ma

· Ban

· Du

e pri

· da

· ho

· lib

and lig

· yo

it is any

P

stances has been paved by some received political writers. The words which raise my jealoufy are these: " I shall not pretend to specu-" late upon the motions of this prince, with " whom the faction have made fo free, nor ex-" plain those words in the preamble of the "D___'s patent, which feem to cross upon " any fuch early undertaking as the Whigs pre-"tend is in view." It is an hard thing to keep one's temper under this malicious infinuation against both the queen and her successors; but his malice is not to be frustrated by my anger, therefore I shall calmly rehearse the preamble of which he speaks, as I find it translated, and have compared it with the Latin. It runs thus:

Whereas the most serene electoral house of Brunswick Lunenburgh is sprung from the royal stock of our ancestors, and in case, of our death without iffue, ought (according to the laws ratified by our authority) to enjoy the kingdoms of their progenitors; yet, as we earnestly defire that the said most serene house should no less be tied to us by friend-hip than by blood and alliances, we, according to our fingular affection towards the fame, have decreed to grace with the highest honours our most dear cousin George Augustus, fon to the most serene elector. And although

6 the polijealpecuwith or exf the upon s prekeep uation

; but anger, amble

and,

runs

ouse of m the ase, of ling to enjoy yet, as serene friendeccordessame, st hon-

USTUS,

hough

6 the

the only fon of fo great a prince cannot go out of his native country without the utmost danger, especially at this time, when the neighbouring states are toffed with such violent tempests: to the end nevertheless, that, as much as possible, he may by the authority of his name and dignity, though abfent, be in a manner present in our parliament and councils, we have ordered him to be added to the number of the peers of this realm. will be to him an earnest of that supream dignity, to which (according to ours, and the wishes of all our subjects) he is destined; that being henceforth adorned with the titles of this most noble kingdom, which the princes of the blood royal have always courted, he ' may be proud to be ours. You therefore the Barons, Viscounts, Earls, Marquisses, and Dukes, congratulate with yourselves, that a prince of fo great hopes, the ornament and darling of Germany, the defender of our most 'holy religion, and the affertor of the public biberty, one that is hereafter to govern you. 'and till then is one of you, should now de-'light to be vested with the same honours with 'you, &c."

I see no imperfection in this preamble; and it is a most disloyal infinuation to say there is any thing in it which seems to cross the expectation

pectation of feeing the Duke of Cambridge in England. All that is faid, that gives the leaft pretence to his stay abroad, to wit, the importance of his person where he is, and passing through nations troubled with war, are fully answered, in that we are now in peace; and most cogent reasons for his coming are implied in the matter which form the Examiner's questions. The infinuation from this preamble is as frivolous as it is malicious; for if the preamble were what we may call the constituting or enacting part of a patent, what would become of peers whose patents have no preambles at all? The Duke of Cambridge is as good a peer as any in England, and is by a subsequent act of parliament the first of the English nobility: and whenever he is pleased to visit England, he has a right to precedence to all our nobles, and to affift or instruct himself at However he is qualified for their councils. the former, he will improve as an Englishman, by being observant of pleadings at the court of judicature wherein is our last appeal. He may learn our laws of persons who have came into that house through their merit in knowledge of them, and from fuch as are fit to converse with and inform princes (without a fervile awe of their quality) how to be bleffings to mankind, and how to fcorn any power over men but such as God uses, a power which

which from fover

divin

Nº 2.

Thi "ho

fubje to fa " na " fac

" alverage!

me The write

gove he n whice

he l deny othe

crea have

him

Nº 2,

dge in e leaft.

nport-

affing

fully

and

e im-

iner's

amble

e pre-

tuting

ld be-

mbles ood a

quent

n no-

vifit

o all

elf at

d for

Eng-

gs at ft ap-

who merit

s are

with-

o be

any ower

which rejects any obedience but what flows from their years and affections, and no other fovereignty can be looked upon as of right divine.

This Examiner has one honest line: "We "hope that the vacancy of the throne is at a " great distance off." This is what every good subject will join with him in. But he goes on to fay, "We have not yet heard of any refig-" nations; and we are confident, that an active " faction, and a passive government, will not " always be the case." Will not always be the case! where, or how is it now the case? I cannot but urge this fentence upon the Examiner. and must own as a Reader, that he never offended me more in his life than in this last sentence. The government, under which the Examiner writes, might very well demand of him what government he means. If it may be prefumed he means the government of that kingdom in which the language wherein he writes is spoken. he has called it despicable; for no one will deny that a paffive government can be any other.

But this man has the least judgement of any creature in the world, except those who, if they have it in their power, do not filence, or bring him to justice.

While

Nº 24

6 his

' hind

and

was

and

· The

· pos thro

his

inv

was oug

· vic tho

eve

· he

his

on aft

· he

in.

· his

While he is tolerated, or any other that ferib. ble to the disadvantage of my country, I will, in justice to all my countrymen their Readers, explain their fophisms, and bring them to the examination of reason and justice. This will I certainly do with firm resolution; and now I name the word resolution, I must say something proper for the theme at top of my paper, which ornament is become a great fashion. I will go on fecure of a reward, as needing none; for virtue (fays my author) will thine with unblemished honour, in spite of all the repulses it can meet with. There is a manuscript, which I had not out of the same library from which the Afferter of Hereditary Right borrowed his quotations, but I will not fay where. ftory is this; (it runs mightily upon the word certain) 'There was a certain husbandman, in a certain kingdom, who lived in a certain place under a certain hill, near a certain bridge. This poor man was a little of a scholar, and given to country learning, fuch as aftrological predictions of the weather, and the like. One ' night, in one of his musings about his house, he faw a party of foldiers belonging to a prince in enmity with his own, coming towards the bridge: he immediately ran and drew up that part which is called the draw-· bridge, and calling all his family, and getting oribwill, ders, Nº 2.

will I ow I hing hich I go for unes it hick

hich his The ord in a

lace lge.

and ical

One use,

to-

ing

his cattle together, he put his plough, be-' hind that his stools, and his chairs behind them, and by this means stopped the march till it was day-light, when all the neighbouring lords and gentlemen faw the enemy as well as he. 'They crowded on with great gallantry to opopose the foe, and in their zeal and hurry throwing our husbandman over bridge, and his goods after him, effectually kept out the 'invaders. This accident (fays my author) was the fafety of that kingdom; yet no one ought to be discomfited from the public fer-'vice for what happened to this ruftick, for though he was neglected at the present, and every man faid he was an honest fellow, that 'he was no one's enemy but his own in expofing 'his all, and that nobody faid he was every one's friend but his own, the man had ever 'after the liberty, that he, and no other but he and his family, should beg on that bridge

Maria and application and both and the horizont with his can consider any which the chartest has more with a consider that is recover percentagy to places the open a - 1

'in all times following.'

he cattle together, he put his plough, hemothat his flools, and his chairs behind them.

was day-light, when all the adight ouring lords

Nº 3.

rehea

has it · F doe

is t

two alw

adv

'inca dict

roc! ' tion

is n

to :

· maj

· Its

' tion

as

' mic

pro

as 1

trer

can

can gre

cac

wel

mo div

unud bus leas

Nº 3. Monday, April 26, 1714. ney crowded on with great gallantry to op-

Qui Bavium non odit amet tua carmina Mævi. VIRG.

IN my last I took notice of that sublime writer "The Examiner." The next to him among the journalists in dignity and order is "The Post-Boy:" this writer is excellent in his kind; but prefenting them both to my imagination at one view, makes me turn to a passage of a Paper published in the volume of Medleys, called "The Whig-Examiner." There the Author, speaking of a Paper entituled, "A Letter to the Examiner," finds it necessary to confider the nature of Nonfense: and afterwards very pleasantly, exquisite pleasantly, represents to us the difference we ought to make between HIGH NONSENSE and Low NONSENSE. A Reader cannot fee any thing any where that has more wit and humour in it, nor that is more necessary to prepare him for the Reading the authors of whom I am speaking. A page or two of his will make up for many a page of mine, therefore I shall rehearle 183.014 · HUDIBRAS has defined Nonfense (as Cowley does wit) by negatives. Nonfense (fays he) is that which is neither true nor false. These two great properties of Nonsense, which are always effential to it, give it fuch a peculiar 'advantage over all other writings, that it is incapable of being either answered or contradicted. It stands upon its own basis like a rock of adamant, secured by its natural fitua-'tion against all conquests or attacks. There is no one place about it weaker than another, 'to favour an enemy in his approaches: the 'major and the minor are of equal strength. · Its questions admit of no reply, and its affertions are not to be invalidated. A man may 'as well hope to distinguish colours in the 'midst of darkness, as to find out what to approve and disapprove in Nonsense: You may as well affault an army that is buried in intrenchments. If it affirms any thing, you cannot lay hold of it; or if it denies, you cannot confute it. In a word, there are greater depths and obscurities, greater intricacies and perplexities, in an elaborate and well written piece of Nonsense, than in the most abstruce and profound tract of school divinity. · After X

IRG.

lime

No 3

him er is at in imaffage lleys, ry to

the

efents ween eader

e wit

vhom make fhall

hearse

Nº 3.

N

6 6

· fe

6 W

· q

· fe e ti

6 b

f th

of

· W

·H ha ha

f th

an

'int

· liq

· in the

6

After this short panegyrick upon Nonsense, which may appear as extravagant to an ordinary reader as Erasmus's Encomium of Folly; I must here solemnly protest, that I have not done it to curry savour with my antagonist, or to reslect any praise in an oblique manner upon the "Letter to the Examiner:" I have no private considerations to warp me into this controversy, since my first entering upon it. But before I proceed any further, because it may be of great use to me in this dispute to state the whole nature of Nonsense, and because it is a subject entirely new, I must take notice that there are two kinds of it, viz.

· High Nonsense and Low Nonsense.

* Low Nonsense is the talent of a cold phleg. matic temper, that in a poor dispirited style creeps along servilely through darkness and confusion. A writer of this complexion gropes his way softly amongst self-contradictions, and grovels in absurdities: Videri vult pauper, & est pauper: he has neither wit nor sense, and f pretends to none.

On the contrary, your High Nonsense blufters and makes a noise; it stalks upon hard words, and rattles through polysyllables. It is loud and sonorous, smooth and periodical.

'It has fomething in it like manliness and force, and makes one think of the name of Sir HER.

CULES

Nº 3.

fense,

n or-

m of

that I

ny an-

blique

iner:"

rp me

tering

urther,

in this

nfenfe,

I must

it, viz.

phleg-

ed style

ess and

gropes

ons, and

uper, &

ife, and

SE bluf-

on hard

bles. It

riodical.

nd force,

ir HER.

6 CULES

cules Nonsense, in the play called "The 'Nest of Fools." In a word, your High Nonsense has a majestic appearance, and wears a most tremendous garb, like Esop's Ass cloathed in a Lion's fkin.

When Aristotle lay upon his death-bed, and was asked whom he would appoint for his fucceffor in his school, two of his scholars being candidates for it, he called for two different forts of wine, and, by the character which he gave of them, denoted the different qualities and perfections that shewed themfelves in the style and writings of each of the competitors. As rational writings have been represented by wine, I shall represent those kinds of writings we are now speaking of by fmall-beer.

Low Nonsense is like that in the barrel. which is altogether flat, tasteless, and infipid. ' High Nonsense is like that in the bottle, which has in reality no more strength and spirit than 'the other, but frets, and flies, and bounces, 'and by the help of a little wind that is got 'into it, imitates the passions of a much nobler 'liquor.

We meet with a Low Groveling Nonsense 'in every Grub-street production; but I think there are none of our present writers who X 2 · have

me

aim

tion Exa

ceal

nien

lutio

the time

he h

wit

thus

he is

appe

argu

work

The

Mali

of Ig

a cri

an ac

have flies 1

becau

as th

own

fever:

afflict

have hit the Sublime in Nonsense, besides Dr.

S-1 in divinity, and the author of this ' letter in politics; between whose characters in their respective professions, there seems to be a very nice refemblance.

'There is still another qualification in Non.

fense which I must not pass over, being that which gives it the last finishing and perfection. This is when an author without any meaning feems to have it, and fo imposes upon us by the found and ranging of his words, that one is apt to fancy they fignify fomething. After having perused such writing, let the reader confider what he has learnt from it, and he will immediately discover the deceit.'

As this excellent discourse was admirably suited to the day or time on which it was published, viz. October 5, 1710*; so, like all things that are truly good, it is still new and useful, and will prove very serviceable to persons who would be criticks in the modern writings, especially those of the journalists. The Examiner began with that sort of spirit which is described by "High Nonsense;" but of late has used that kind only which was last described, as putting off no meaning "by the sound and ranging of words." Give me leave therefore to express, as a Reader, what sentiments arise in

me,

^{*} See Whig-Examiner, Nº 4; with this motto, "Satis elequentia, sapientia parum." SALLUST.

N° 3.

This cters ins to

Nonthat erfect any ipofes of his ignify riting, from eceit.' irably useful, as who gs, ese Exhich is of late cribed, and and erefore

things

arise in Satis ele-ALLUST

me,

me, and what temper I am left in by the perusal of the Examiner, and Post boy. The chief aim and purpose of these authors are Defamation, which both carry on with fecurity. The Examiner escapes punishment by being concealed; the Post-Boy by being below refentment. There was about the time of the Revolution a natural fool they called Job in one of the colleges of Oxford. The wags of that time used to teach him scandalous verses, which he had memory enough to repeat, though not wit enough to understand. The Post-Boy is thus made use of by our dabblers in politicks; he is the vent for their crudities, before they appear in themselves, and the Examiner is to argue them into reputation. Both these good works are carried on by the vehicle of Nonfense. The Nonfense of the Examiner is composed of Malice and Impudence; that of the Post-Boy of Ignorance and Stupidity. The Examiner is a criminal which is not yet taken; the Post-Boy an accessory that we know could not of himself have entered into the guilt. The Examiner flies from the law; the Post-Boy need not fly, because he is exempt from it as an ideot. But as this is really the state of the case, I must own I cannot but be highly furprized why feveral of the good subjects of these realms are afflicted or exalted at any of the Nonsense X 3 uttered uttered by those authors; for no one ought to hold himself commended or disparaged by those who do not themselves stand in the view of mankind, under the same rules of examination as to their own actions with the rest of the world. I therefore, by the force of natural justice and reason, pronounce all the Nonsense which the Examiner ever has, or ever shall utter, let it be never so sublime, or never so mischievous in itself, to be of no effect of any moment, with regard to life, limb, honour, or fame of any of her Majesty's subjects, because no one knows who he is; and I pronounce the same of the Post-Boy, because every body knows who he is.

Indeed I could not but wonder how the Post-Boy should grow so very famous in this nation as he has, ever fince I was shewed the man's person; for he is a personage of a very inconfiderable figure for one that makes fo much noise in the world; whereas all others who have risen by Nonsense have had something overbearing and arrogant, and have had usually robust figures and lofty language to fet themselves off. But I shall do my endeavour in my future lectures to explain to the world how it has happened that Nonsense has been so prevalent at fundry times in these kingdoms; but I cannot go into that matter till I have made the force nd of p N o t

f N

he a nd atio

im mol

Nº

roc f it, VEL ng, nous

ble

hardi

Nº 3 ght to y those iew of ination of the natural onsense l utter, nievous t, with any of knows of the vho he

Nº 3.

e Post. nation man's inconmuch ho have erbear-

of

f Nonfense in general a little better understood, nd shewed from Machiavel how by two kinds f perplexity, which he calls in the Italian. Nonfense to the Understanding, and Nonsense o the Conscience," he could, for the use of he ambitious, make the terms Honour, Justice, nd Truth, meer words, and of no other fignifiation, but what shall serve the self interest of im who shall utter them for his own private molument.

Nº 4. Wednesday, April 28, 1714.

- Nefas animam præferre pudori.

Tuv.

FTER I had in my last Lecture confidered HIGH NONSENSE and LOW NONSENSE, I robust proceeded in my discussion to a second division ves off, of it, from a manuscript of the great MACHIas hapng, and Nonsense to the Understandng, and Nonsense to the Conscience. That faalent at mous politician avers, that to carry confidercannot able points, especially in affemblies (next to the e force hardness of caring for nothing else but carrying

X 4

it),

Nº 4, it), the main matter is to find out persons whom he calls in the Italian Almoxarifasge, which, as far as we can reach it in the English, fignifies "Wrong Fellows;" men who have the fame right from fortune to be orators and give their fuffrage, but differ in the gifts of nature. These Wrong Fellows have in them something like fense which is not sense, but enough to confound all the fense in the world. They are from being incapable of conceiving right at first, also incapable of being set right after they have vented their perplexities. He recounts you a famous instance of this among the Guelfs and Ghibelins, the parties of Italy. There was, faid he, among them a person of the first quality, whom no one in the world ever did or could possibly like, that was in nature both in mind and body a puzzle, from head to foot hideously aukward, from his first conception to the utmost extent of his judgement ridiculoufly abfurd. This animal, the leader of the Ghibelins, used to put others upon faying what he thought fit to interrupt bufiness, or break into what he was ashamed, or believed improper to begin himself. This person was master of that Nonsense, which was called above " Nonfense to the Understanding." What he faid every body could observe had nothing in it, and at the very best, which happened but feldom,

N° 4: feldom break orators nable, punctio difgrac affemb > cies, u nable l was no wholly purpo the ch

Reafor fashio it by each c

upon his or out p kind

"No No party and t it wh harde the g

deed,

J° 4,

hom

1, as nifies

fame

their

ture.

h to

y are

they

ounts

uelfs

here

first

id or

th in foot

ption

dicu-

f the

what break

im-

was bove

at he ng in

but

dom,

feldom, was but like the truth; but how to break in upon him, perplexed all the great orators of the Guelfs. Thus he flood impregnable, and the leader, instead of having compunction for fuch a piece of humanity, to the difgrace of our nature, standing in an illustrious affembly casting forth blunders and inconfistencies, used to fit fneering to observe how impregnable his fool was, and exulting in himself that it was not in the compass of all the sciences either wholly to aver he had uttered nothing to the purpose, or to bring him to it. Many others the chieftain of the Ghibelins had to support each other against the first assaults of Sense and Reason; and brought Nonsense so far into fashion, that they who knew better would speak it by way of triumph over those who went upon the rules of logick. Wrong Fellows were his orators, but this could not do only, without persons who were as much masters of that kind of Nonsense, which my author calls "Nonfense to the Conscience."

Nonsense to the Conscience, is when the party has arrived to such a disregard to reason and truth, as not to follow it, or acknowledge it when it presents itself to him. This is the hardest task in the world, and had very justly the greatest wages from the chieftain: for indeed, if we were to speak seriously, this is the lowest lowest condition of life that can possibly be imagined; for it is literally giving up life, as it is human, which descends to that of a beast when it is not conducted by reason, and still is worse when it is pushed against reason. Now all those parties of the species which we call Majorities, when they do things upon the mere force of being fuch, are actuated by the force of Nonfense of Conscience; by which Machi-AVEL meant, that the doing any thing with Nonsense, that is without sense of the honour and justice of it, was what he called pushing things by the Nonfense of Conscience. that arch politician proceeds, in the manuscript I am speaking of, to observe, that Nonsense was not to be used, but as an expedient; for it would fail in the repetition of it, and the Understanding would so goad the Conscience, that no potentate has revenue enough to pay reasonable men for along feries of Nonfenfical fervice. They will, quoth he, occasionally, and now and then, give into an enormity, and pass by what they do not approve, and laugh at themselves for fo doing: but there is fomething latent in the dignity of their nature, which will recoil, and raise in them an indignation against herding for ever with the half-witted and the abfurd; and being conscious that their concurrence is an aggravated transgression, in that it is the fur capable they an My Nonfer of tim numbe from t all the reason be put the mi the pe into w the ap advise militua lecting and C fhame explan happe

The as to talk of they a

The I

end in conten

Nº 4.

y be

, as

beaft

till is

Now

call

mere force

CHI-

with nour

hing

But

cript

fense

or it

Un-

that afon-

vice.

and what elves

nt in ecoil,

nerd-

e ab-

cur-

it is

the

the support of those who in themselves are incapable either of the guilt or shame of what they are managed to promote.

My author further adds, that the use of Nonsense of Conscience will fail also in process of time, not only from the defection of the numbers of those who act under it, but also from the little effect it would foon have upon all the world, befides those numbers; for which reason he advises, that now and then they should be put upon fomething that is good to fatisfy the multitude. For, fays that fagacious man, the people are always honest; you lead them into wrong things but as long as you keep up the appearance of right; for which reason he advises never to forbear the use at least of verifimilitudes; and indeed, he fays, it was by neglecting that, all the fensible men, both Guelfs and Ghibelins, came together out of mere fhame; and receive one another without making explanations or expostulations upon what had happened when they differed, when they could end in nothing but how fillily you acted! how contemptibly you fuffered!

The most excellent authors of this our age, as to proficiency in Nonsense, are those who talk of faction, and pretend to tell others that they are spreaders of false fears, and jealousies. The Examiner of the 26th says, We have a

' faction

Then

ing.

· muc

the !

e men

pab!

real!

· fequ vet !

a ti

it, th

the]

ment

other

ders,

one h

Exan

fame

choic

fay t tolera

them Bu

upon

they

and a

of n tions

sense

faction in our bowels, who, when it comes to their turn to submit, make no difference bes tween liberty and power, that all their bufiness may be only to squabble about the profits.'-Now he fays this either as an incendiary or an informer; if the latter, let him name who are in this faction; if he will not do that, we are to fet down the word Faction among the rest of his jargon of High Nonsense, and dismis him with an inclination only, not power, to do more mischief. But as I conceive, he had a younger brother born to him the fame day of my first appearance, and is named the Monitor. He begins with the old trick of the pickpockets, who commit a robbery, and join in the cry after the offender. The purpose of his paper, if it is not to pass into the realms of Nonsense also, is to lay a foundation for making exceptions against a certain prince's behaviour who is expected in England. He lays before us, That the Duke of GUISE was an hot and ambitious prince, who took ill courfes and un-did himfelf. Had the king, fays he, with timely severity, taken care to have caused those libels, however triffing and however infignificant, to be suppressed, or by solid reafon and good evidence to have been detected and exposed, the fatal effects which they produced had been in a great measure avoided.

Then

No 4.

omes to nce be.
outlines ofits.'—
y or an who are we are rest of s him
o more ounger
ny first
. He

Nº 4.

paper,
on fense excepor who re us, d amad un-

caused ver ind reatected

y pro-

Then

.

Then for application he fays of libelling, . Seeing then the fame evil, and that with too much fuccess, is already begun among us, and the same neglect of it appears in our government as did in France, thinking them not capable of doing fo much mischief as they 'really did; why may we not apprehend con-'fequences, though not fo extraordinarily fatal, vet sufficiently dangerous, and such as call for 'a timely redress?' I find there is no help for it, this writer must be passed upon the foot of the Nonfenfical also: does he tell a government they are guilty of neglect, and call any other men libellers? he must name his offenders, and bring them before justice, or he is one himself. It is strange want of skill (in the Examiner, and fuch imitators of him as this fame Monitor begins to shew himself) in the choice of tools, to make use of creatures that fay things, in which it would be a fault to tolerate them, if they were not employed by themselves.

But I shall take upon me to keep a strict eye upon their behaviour, and scribble as fast as they: for when they give up all rules of honour and conscience to hurt and betray the liberties of mankind, I shall sacrifice smaller considerations, and venture now and then to write Non-sense for the good of my country—

A D-

Nº 4.

· Sage

Trib

the · fcept

by c

for artif

regu

'knig

gree

· Flee

s oth

and

· way

6 hor

and paf

· Sca

a C

6 a (

feff

for

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Faction is bumbly desired to read carefully the following Satyr against Sedition in the Ex. AMINER, and amend their lives if they understand it.

What a noble opportunity would the fame CERVANTES have, to improve his art, and carry this way of writing much further; were he now alive, and as conversant in our affairs, as in the humours of his own country? The fame Martial Madness is broke out among us; a distemper more raging and violent, and productive of more ridiculous, and far more dangerous effects. Instead of touching here and there a weak head, or reaching only to a few frolicksome individuals, it has infected whole bodies and focieties of warlike Enthu-· fiasts: the party is almost as strong as the de-· lufion with which they are animated; and our · Romantic Madmen march up and down in troops and squadrons: the regularity and resemblance of their frenzy creates order and difcipline. We have our books and legends of · Chivalry, containing the feats and adventures of Errant Saints, of Holy Almanzors and Drawcanfirs, bound by strict vow, and affisted by · Sages efully Exnder-

fame and were ffairs, The mong more here to a ected athue ded our coops efem-

'forced-meat balls.'

difds of tures raw-

rawd by Sages · Sages and Magicians: who destroyed nations, made whole kingdoms do homage and pay Tribute to their mightiness; tamed the Beaft, and kept the great Whore under; trod upon the necks of kings, and kicked crowns and feptres before them; relieved the distressed by changing their condition; freed mankind for their own use; and turned the world, as 'artificers whirl about the globe, to prove the regularity of its motion. Some of these knights were by birth gentle and of low degree; fo called from the peftle, the Golden Fleece, the truncbeon, or the brazen belmet: others had been Pages, Dwarfs, and Squires, and many of them were forced to go a great way in fearch of their parentage: and yet the honours they acquired, the spoils they won, and the dominions they conquered, vaftly furpaffed the leffer acquisitions of a Mistres's Scarf, a Saladin's Daughter, a Sett of Armour, a Cupboard of plate, won at some tournament; a Cafile, a Palace, or even than the rich pof-' fessions of the islands of pines, battara, or of N° 5. Friday, April 30, 1714.

Mania, surgentemque nova Carthaginis Arcem. VIRG.

Take upon me, as a Reader, among other things, to make my plain observations upon the papers as they come out; and the news I Read yesterday has given occasion to the following letter, which, out of zeal to my country, I writ to my Lord Mayor's gentleman of the horse, who I think ought to send us scribblers when we are saucy, to the Green-yard, as well as unruly hackney-coachmen and other transgressions in the streets of London. But all I can do is only to take notice of things, and leave the redress to the proper officers.

· To the Sword-bearer of London.

SIR,

"THOUGH I have not the honour to be acquainted with you, yet I have always with great great carry hono this fears and d only coura me, fubje Prete if the ner o in wh would out o from ftroye fince he is can b to hu it is a being > when canno

> Maje

mann

is in great delight and fatisfaction, beheld you carry that awful weapon which you have the honour to bear before the chief magistrate of this renowned and wealthy city. The many fears and jealoufies which are with much care and diligence spread among the multitude, only because some people have not as much courage as others, have been apt to intimidate me, among many other well-meaning good fubjects. Those rumours are chiefly about the Pretender, and the demolition of Dunkirk; as if the French King, who has done us no manner of harm ever fince the time was expired in which he should have demolished that place, would do it now. This is being fuspicious out of meer humour and temper of mind, not from reason. It is true indeed, he has defroyed the works of the town, but that was fince it was an English garrison; and though he is obliged in honour not to hurt us, who can blame him for not leaving it in our power to hurt him? Dunkirk then is demolished as it is an English garrison; but is it not yet in being as it is a French harbour? and now when things are in this condition, I think we cannot enough applaud his most Christian Majesty, in that we have not received any manner of hurt from him, though so much is in his power. Therefore I must needs say,

Y

ollowintry, of the oblers

VIRG.

other

upon

fgrefan do

to be s with and I say it from a great respect to his Ma. e jesty's faith and honour, that I am of opinion he will not fend the Pretender amongst us; but if ambition should come into the thoughts of fo pious a prince, after the difbanding fo many of our forces, and that the few we have left lie in parts so distant from each other, I place great confidence, let me tell you, Sir, in you, and hope that on fuch an occasion you will exert yourfelf according to your office. Be pleased, Sir, to remember, that a Lord Mayor of London, in the reign of King Richard, dispatched Wat Tyler at the head of his followers. He did it, as the history fays, with a dagger: how much more, Sir, is it expected of you to cut off the Pretender with that great fword which you bear with fo much calmness, which is always a fign of courage? Let me tell you, Sir, in the present posture of affairs, I think it seems to be expected of you; and I cannot but advise you, if he should offer to land, or indeed if he ' should so much as come up the river, to take the water-bailiff with you, and cut off his head. I would not fo much, if I were you, as tell him who I was, till I had done it. is outlawed; and I stand to it, that if the water-bailiff is with you, and concurs, you may do it on the Thames; but if he offers to · land,

· lan by ord

Nº 5

'that the oft

68 adv: 'ima be f

you ' fo r · yeste

ic Y " kirk

" that " were

" harb " which " ous

" two "up a

" harb " the " men

" part" town

land, it is out of all question you may do it by virtue of your post, without waiting for orders. It is from this comfort and support. that in spite of what all the malcontents in the world can fay, I have no manner of fear of the Pretender.

Stocks rife meerly upon reports to the difadvantage of the Pretender; you may eafily imagine how much they will rife, if you will be fo good as to cut off his head. To tell vou the truth, what makes me press the matter fo much is, that one of the news-papers of 'yesterday has it thus: cether equialt him; but it feems those bat

"London, April 29.

"YESTERDAY arrived letters from Dun-"kirk, dated the 22d of April. They advise, "that on the Friday following, fifteen battalions " were expected there, to begin to cut the new " harbour defigned to be made at Mardyke, "which it was judged will be more commodi-"ous than ever that of Dunkirk was: that "two hundred carpenters are employed, to take off his "up and fave the timber of the jettees of the "the new-intended harbour. They add, that if the men were going hard to work to fill up that rs, you " part of the harbour of Dunkirk next the offers to town, and therefore all the shipping in that Y 2

Manion us: ghts g fo have er, I Sir, afion your hat a King head iftory

Sir, is tender with fo gn of resent be exe you, if he

to take

· land,

" part of the harbour were ordered to fall down to the haven port in three or four days at "furthest."

. I beg of your Serenity to be upon your guard. for I am one of those that hate to have it in any one's power to do me a mischief. Suppose these fifteen battalions should have a mind, and get leave to come for England with the Pretender, if you do not look sharp and do your office like a brave man and a worthy citizen, how do you know but we might be undone before we could get fifteen battalions together against him; but it seems those battalions are brought down only to work at a e new harbour in the neighbourhood of that which they have now at Dunkirk. You may be fure that must be a jest; for sure the French could not have the impudence to do fuch a thing! I fwear to you, I think that would be using us worse than forbearing to abolish the harbour they have already. This would be an injustice to our Properties, but that would be an infult also upon our Understandings. We should be the shame of nations to be put off with so palpable an evasion. But if there should be any such attempt as coming upon us, I earnestly recommend it to your · Serenity N° 5

you

Ext

ate

with peace

the 'T

'Mar 'T

kirk eithe

Scotl

whol any

'made

Serenity to draw that dead-doing blade, and you will be had in everlafting honour by, Sir, your great admirer, and most humble servant,

ENGLISH READER.

Extract from a pamphlet, called, "The Import-'ance of Dunkirk confidered."

That the British NATION expect the immediate demolition of it.

That the very common people know, that, within two months after the figning of the peace, the works towards the sea were to be demolished, and within three months after it 'the works towards the land.

'That the faid peace was figned the last of 'March, O. S.

'That the British nation received more damage in their trade from the port of Dunkirk, than from almost all the ports of France, either in the Ocean, or in the Mediterranean.

That the Pretender failed from thence to Scotland; and that it is the only port the French have till you come to Brest, for the whole length of St. George's channel, where any confiderable naval armament can be 'made.

· That

ard, it in Supaind,

Nº 5.

own

s at

d do orthy t be lions

the batat a that may

rench ach a ld be h the vould that tand-

ns to

But ming your

renity

That the fituation of Dunkirk is fuch as that it may always keep runners, to observe

'all fhips failing on the Thames and Med.

way.

That whether it may be advantageous to the trade of Holland or not that Dunkirk fhould be demolished, it is necessary for the fafety, honour, and liberty of England, that it fhould be fo. salidade addition of the

'That when Dunkirk is demolished, the power of France, on that fide, should it ever be turned against us, will be removed several hundred miles further off of Great-Britain than it is at present.

'That the demolition of Dunkirk will re-' move France many hundred miles further of from us.2

CAVEAT.

THE paper called "The Monitor" is impudent and traiterous: he dared yesterday to print words hereafter recited. He is a follower of the Examiner, a tool who like him, under pretence of vindicating her Majesty's servants, fuggests things against her honour and dignity, which it is criminal to mention, but to remind those in power to vindicate her facred name and character from his scurrility. His words are these:

· How

·H to ha for, ation e vern care, thing dang

with f tend

Nº 6

" The " m

" ch

66 O "h

remai of th turn N° 5. uch as observe Med-ous to unkirk or the that it d, the it ever feveral in than her off

is imday to llower under rvants, ignity, emind ne and ds are

· How

'How can it but be uneasy to her Majesty, to have a people whom she has done so much for, and whom, with so much justice, moderation, clemency, and goodness, she has governed, whose safety has been so much her care, and to whom she never denied any thing, now fall upon her administration as dangerous to the nation, and reproach her with designs to betray them to the Prestender?'

Nº 6, Monday, May 3, 1714.

"The Constitution in Church and State must be the "measure and standard of every public person's "character, the sum of his pretensions, the mark of his conversion or steadiness, and the tenure of his greatness, and authority."

EXAM. Numb. 44.

A READER that has any understanding is naturally a Commentator. This is a most remarkable sentence, which I have taken out of the last Examiner: it occasioned me to turn to some affertions in an half-sheet, in-tituled.

Y 4

the !

their coun

avoid

e ment

wher

of "

f ple,

' doin

both

the !

'intro

f peal

Befi

f and

'mal

flitt

f vati

fhou

f mir

con

! pov

tion'

'tha

wh

and

out :

* S1

dated

T

tituled, "A Letter to Sir Miles Wharton concerning occasional peers." The writer of that letter fays, 'When I confider the danger of making occasional lords, and lay before the world this fatal novelty, as it affects the Queen's most excellent Majesty, the House of Peers, and the whole people of England; I affert, that the numerous creation of peers is the greatest wound that can be given to the prerogative. A peer and his heirs are checks in the legislature to the Queen and her heirs; that part of the legistature which is in the Queen, is apparently diminished by so much as she gives out of it from her own into other families, This is equally destructive with relation to the merit of the persons on whom honour is conferred; if they happen to be men who are barely unblameable, without talents or high qualifications, they do but crowd that illustrious affembly, and, like all other crowds, they f are ferviceable and hurtful but just as they are inspired by those who have skill to lead As to the House of Peers, it is visible that the power of each lord is fo much less confiderable as it is repeated in other persons; f but the great hardship to that great and awful body, whose privileges have so often been a fafety and protection to the rights of us below them; I fay, the great hardship to these noble patriots is, that, when they are prepared with

s the

3

Nº 6. conter of langer before ets the use of ind; I eers is to the cksin ; that ueen, gives nilies. to the s conno are r high lustri-. they they o lead vifible h less rions; awful peen a below

noble

1 with

s the

the most strict honour and integrity to do their duty in relation to their prince and country, all their determinations may be avoided by a fet of people brought in the moment before they come to a question. Now when we come to confider the introduction of "Occasional Lords with regard to the people," what can be more plain, than that it is doing all that is necessary to take from them both liberty and property at once: for from the very moment a man has a patent, and is introduced into the House of Peers, men appeal to him from the decree of all the judges. Besides this, the Lords are perpetual legislators. and have an hand in the repealing as well as making laws; by which means the whole constitution may be subverted by this one innovation. And it is plain, that the prince who 'should place so entire a confidence in his ministry, as to give peerage upon their recommendation, would enable them by that ! power in the legislature, joined to the execution of the regal authority as ministers, to give that prince and nation to the next potentate who should be powerful enough to receive 'and maintain so vast a present *.'

The Examiner has of late a fecond, who fets out as hardened in iniquity as himfelf, who is

^{*} STEELE owned, in 1715, that he was the Author of this Letter, dated Jan. 1714-12. See STEELE'S "Letters," vol. II. p. 349-

This stupid doggrel term of Bullymandra is given to turn an open behaviour and honest countenance, a noble elocution, and many other qualities which render the gentleman the object of respect and love to all that know him, into burlesque. But these little tools may well endeavour to debase those excellences and endowments which render their pitiful shifts and artistices useless. This gentleman is a perfect master

Nº 6. maft that oufly this : drib hefit with pole to p qual of a pref ever infin tiers cavi man was that has not

" fo

" to agai

rest

It is

No 6.

Ie has fame
This with he deis deis are that page, d, he man thout
A but

onally findy, he ecame ecially other object into ell enndowand erfect nafter master in business, and has so clear an head, that he communicates his thoughts as perspicuoufly as they are placed in his own mind. For this reason every wily blockhead, whose brain dribbles crude conceptions, on a tongue that hefitates in the representation of them, looks with envy at a capacity that at once both exposes and confutes him. A manly resolution to perfift in the right in an honest cause, and qualities to make that cause shine in the midst of all that iniquity and craft can invent to oppress it, are never to be forgiven. It has been ever the custom of these tools, to turn all the infinuations which they believe may affect Courtiers upon her Majesty. After he has in a caviling way fallen upon this worthy gentleman as no less than a liar, for saving Dunkirk was not demolished, and that the completion of that work would be deferred to Christmas; he has the impudence to take no notice that it is not yet done, and to add, " notorioufly false! " for it was begun when her Majesty thought "it proper, and the compleating it not limited " to any time." After this barbarous infinuation against our fovereign, that gentleman may well rest satisfied with his share of slander from him. It is worthy repetition; this man fays " the de-" molition was begun when her Majesty thought "it proper, and the compleating it not limited " to a time."

This Author forms himfelf upon the Ex. ammer in the practice of impudence, fcandal. and prevarication; and goes on in his paper to attack a much less confiderable man than the former, against whom indeed he has the vote of the present sitting House of Commons. there is nothing in that vote which authorifes any man to call Mr. STEELE a liar for what he has faid about Dunkirk. The heavy difplea. fure of the Commons of Great-Britain would have been a protection from infult with a man of any humanity, rather than have given occafion to add to the diffress. It would have become a good fubject and an honest man, rather to have lamented this misfortune of a Commoner of Great-Britain expelled from his feat, and have made arguments in behalf of himself and all his fellow subjects, that the like penalty for less offences may not befall better men in future parliaments. Put the case that any great man should at any time lay a defign of removing a man he did not like out of the House of Commons, and should be able to effect it upon accusations of him for the errors of his former life: now I say supposing this, and granting that the Crown can make Lords when it pleases, Lords added by half dozens, and Commoners removed Nº 6, remo the

VERN T lies, " alf quot " tic " me " itf circu of S avers than be fo > is en mali ting opin of a hone

grea

beca

B of M to fe pub

him

be f

Nº 6.

mited

Ex.

andal,

er to

n the e vote

rorifes

hat he

Splea-

would

man

occa-

e be-

rather

Com-

feat,

imself

enalty

en in great

emov-

use of

upon

ormer

inting

eafes,

oners

noved

But

removed one by one, would quickly invert the constitution, and destroy the British Go-VERNMENT.

The dull rogue accusing STEELE of writing lies, and speaking of the Crisis, says, "Yet here " also palpable falshood is apparent;" and then quotes these words, "The most important ar-"ticle between France and England is the de-" molishing of Dunkirk." " That is false in-"itself," fays the Monitor; and naming other circumstances, among which is the renunciation of Spain by France, and France by Spain, he avers of them, that they are more important than the demolition of Dunkirk. Why it may be fo, and yet STEELE may have spoken very honeftly. Suppose I should fay adultery is the greatest of all fins, can you reckon me a liar because you think idolatry a greater? but it is endless to talk to these muddy, perplexed, malicious, blundering rogues; they cannot diftinguish between what a man fays by way of opinion, and what he relates as a representation of a fact.

But I am glad to hear, now I am speaking of Mr. STEELE, that he is turning his thoughts to fervices which may be of greater use to the public, and less exceptionable with regard to himself, than controversial writings can possibly be from a man against whom there is formed fo-

ftrong

firong a prejudice. There are, I am informed, in his custody, proper materials for the history of the war in Flanders; and it feems the relation will commence from the date of the Duke of Marlborough's commissions of Captain. general and Plenipotentiary, and end with the expiration of those commissions. I doubt not but he knows well enough how much a partizan he is thought, and will therefore produce fufficient authorities for what he shall write. It is not doubted but this history, formed from the most authentic papers, and all the most fecret intelligence which can be communicated with fafety to perfons now living, and in the confidence of foreign courts, will be very entertaining, and put the services of her Majesty's ministers at home and abroad in a true light. The work is to be in folio, and proposals for the encouragement of it may be feen at Mr. Tonson's, bookfeller, in the Strand *.

Wednesday,

N°

Nº 7.

" Me

" t

up in down amir for it who

appa gan,

form he v

rend its e

he l

pro

^{*} The following note occurred to recollection too late for infertion in its proper place. READER, No. 1, ad finem.

^{} A celebrated Italian painter is said to have served a dignitary of the Romish church the same waggish trick. In a painting of Hell-torments for an Altar-piece, he drew Judas with all the pontificalias, in the striking likeness of a Prior, to whom he bore some grudge. The Prior complained of the impious painter to the Pope; but his Holiness, happening to be a man of humour, said cooly, "Sir, I could and would have taken you out of Purgatory, but HELL is out of my jurisdiction." on rolling and resemblying astronomical med, iftory relaDuke

otainn the

Nº 6.

t not paroduce write.

from most icated in the ry enjesty's light.

e for in-

Mr.

d a dig.

In a

V Judas

Prior, to the img to be a alld have my juris.

efday,

N° 7. Wednesday, May 5, 1714.

"Men engaged in ill designs must suit their tools to "their work, and make choice of agents sit to do
"the business that is assigned them."

Ехам. Мау 3, 1714.

THERE can be no greater commendation to an author, than that he acts and comes up in his practice to the maxims which he lays down for the instruction of others. The Examiner ought therefore to be juftly celebrated for making the above apology in behalf of those who employ him, and of himself, who has performed to his utmost ability the work in which he was employed. The professed, or at least apparent defign of this author fince he first began, has been to villify an administration which rendered the kingdom of England the terror of its enemies, and the refuge of its friends; and he has done as much in this good work as the cause would bear, which could not possibly be promoted but by two methods, the one to keep up popular prejudices, the other to disparage men of great reputation on the contrary fide.

This is fo truly his character, that there is no one paper of his which does not afford us examples of this practice. As to the point of general prejudice, he fays of those whom he calls the Whigs, ' If they could not find men either more zealous for a fingle family than for the conflitution, or who were in possession of fome principles prejudicial either to the rights of the Crown or the Church, or who had given proofs of their preferring the interests of their party to the laws religion, and · liberties of their country: if they could not meet with persons at least indifferent in their fentiments of loyalty and regard for the Church, rather than want tools, or hazard their cause in the hands of honest men, they would refort to the open implacable enemies of both, and lavish their favours upon professed

Republicans, Free-thinkers, Deifts, Socinians, Occasional Conformists, both by themselves and all their acquaintance.'

This long accufation alludes to no one circumstance in the world, nor was there ever one man of that character preferred under the late ministry. And this great master in tautology, who has faid the fame thing ten thousand times with the most impudent falshood, has never produced produ

blicati ar th himfe

ffigne No outati confpi manki difban o his his la ffertio his. by g it for cieti natui them what their cruft

in ge

was and ' them

gener Thi

eader

Nº 70 arage e.

is no s exnt of m he men than effion o the who he in-, and d not their r the nazard they emies ofessed nians, felves ne cirer one e late ology, times never duced

produced one fingle instance of such a misapplication of the public favour. In this particuar therefore the tool has very well acquitted himself of the employment to which he was ffigned.

Nº 7.

Now as to the disparaging men of great reoutation, he has abused every man that was conspicuous in the late war for the liberties of mankind, from the Emperor of Germany to a disbanded subaltern. But I shall not run back o his former great exploits, but confider only is last paper, with principal regard to his ffertion which I have placed at the head of He says, 'Lesser ills must be supported by greater; and Providence hath fo ordered it for the good of mankind and peace of focieties, that ill principles and ill conduct naturally go together. But still I infist, that, in general, the defign of these men to strengthen themselves, to find out and to distinguish what they called Merit and Service, to keep their body closely and firmly united, and to crush all opposition in its earliest attempts, was a proof of their excelling in prudence and worldly wisdom; and they thereby shewed themselves to be at least as wife in their generation as those who came after them.'

This is a very plain declaration, that "thefe eaders of the Whigs excelled in prudence and worldly

ackt wife exam they

Nº ;

Nº 7.

we what

fo la by fa If

chea vises " is fays,

the f tual empl

temp

hig

the of

fooi

man,

worldly wisdom." One would have thought worldly wisdom would never have been mentioned as a subordinate character in men of business; but it seems those of that character now, according to this affertion of the Examiner, are Babes of Grace: the innocents are averse to the wiles and stratagems of the wicked, and they are too pious for the affairs of this world. They, alas! good men, carry the Christian instruction of forgiving their enemies to an excess that is to be allowed to men abstracted from all the temptations of this life; and know that whatever can happen, it must go well with the saints.

The Examiner has plainly shewn, that the chief imputation against the late Leaders in the fashion of the world, was their sinfulness; and the weakness of the present, their too much Speaking of the former and the latter, he fays, "They shewed themselves to be at least as wife in their generation as those who " came after them." This godly phrase of as wife in their generation," though it may aptly fit the wicked of whom he speaks it; yet there is a transposition of persons and things, which makes it approach very near to what we call Nonsense. It is an odd way of speaking, to compare a man's carriage to that of those who come after him; but at the fame time ack nownought i mennen of aracter ne Exents are vicked, of this

Nº 7.

e Chrifes to an stracted d know ell with hat the s in the s in the s; and o much e latter, o be at ofe who harase of it may it; yet things, what we beaking, of those time I ck now-acknowledge it a favour that he allows them as wife though they had not the advantage of their example. But, alas! when we confider that they were only as wife in things of this world, we must by that circumstance account, that what good they were capable of doing had a duration accordingly, and could not possibly be so lasting and effectual, as those which are done by faints and new converts.

If men take things as we ought, and with the chearfulness this good man the Examiner advises, upon the "thorough Reformation which "is now openly talked of," and, our author fays, " fome steps have been taken towards it;" the faints are contriving for the edification of some people, who perhaps, for want of a spiritual cast, may take it for an affliction to lose an employment. Our author exhorts them against temptation in the following comfortable words: 'Their dismission, which was only a right before, would then become an act of justice, ' highly fafe and necessary, if they should assume 'a new spirit of turbulency and uneafiness at their going off; and their very friends, instead of pitying their misfortune, would then be 'more ready to wonder why it happened no 'fooner.'

This righteous author speaks this as a churchman, and has his eye only upon the goods of the spirit: he prepares therefore all such as are to receive difgraces and afflictions, not to miftake them as things not meant for their good. An action is always to be understood and interpreted by the character of the person who does it. Let no one therefore take an injury that is done him by a faint, or new convert, to proceed from ill-will. How could a fanctified perfon lay a greater obligation upon another, than by being the instrument of begetting in him the virtue of patience? Suppose a soldier should have passed through ten campaigns under a commander that had reduced his heart to the love of the vain pomps and vanities of this world, by leading him through a continual fcene of triumph, what could a new convert do for him better than to fend him a-starving? this would be the true way for those who are above worldly wisdom to distinguish "Merit and Service." Such must be the treatment of mankind from those who are but comparatively " wifer in their generation," to those who are exposed in another scripture phrase as "delighting in war."

Z 2

the

The Monitor of the day following, to wit, on the instant of my present writing, May 4, after abufing his brother-scribblers, which we do not meddle with, as having it in themselves to revenge, abuses a Reverend Divine in doggrel, grel, writter of Ca takes o flatteft farmer it with " wou " Can " mak

Nº 7.

fwering good 1 Exami the M quifiti

" Wo " mol " Тов

" WOU " the

" tyra " the

" vent

" ful, " land

« fairs

" cond " thef

" upo

orel, and then proceeds to an account of a written libel, giving an invitation to the Duke of Cambridge to come over into England. He takes occasion to tell a very filly discourse in the flattest manner imaginable, between a country farmer and a neighbouring townsman, and ends it with leaving amongst us this question, "What " would they have him (to wit, the Duke of "Cambridge) come hither for, if it is not to "make him a king?" I fee no danger in anfwering the question, which is, to make him a good king when it comes to his turn. But the Examiner, who is as wife in his generation as the Monitor who comes after him, has been inquisitive about this matter before; he asked. "Would the coming of the young Prince de-"molish Dunkirk more effectually? would "TOBY BUTLER's recruits immediately defert? "would it raise the siege of Barcelona? break "the peace? change the nature of French "tyranny? or reduce the exorbitant power of "the Duke of Lorrain? I believe they will not " venture to fay, that a prince, however power-"ful, yet a subject still, would, upon his first "landing, interpose so vigorously in public af-" fairs. And if fo, then it is plain from the "conduct of the Whigs themselves, that all " these clamours which they have so long dwelt "upon, taking each particular case as their own " advocates Z 3 are mifood.

iterdoes

at is proper-

than him

ould

r a

the

this

nual

t do

ng?

are

Ierit

it of

vely

are

de-

wit,

y 4,

we

lves

log-

rel,

" advocates have flated it, are perfectly ground. e less, and the Protestant religion is in no dan-" ger from any of these incidents; unless they " would loyally and modeftly infinuate, that " the fame things which they call grievances " under her Majesty, would cease to be so if any " of her Protestant heirs were resident amongst And I answered, though the arrival of the Duke of Cambridge would not demolish Dunkirk, yet it would make us less fearful of the ill consequences from its being undemolished; one of which may be an attempt of impofing upon us the Pretender, whose invasion would be less dreaded, when one who is a prince of the blood was ready to fight against him, and animate all good subjects in her Majesty's and his own cause against him. Toby Butler's recruits might nor, perhaps, desert; but it would make Mr. BUTLER's promise to them, of feeing their master soon in these dominions, more unlikely than at present, when so valorous a prince as the Duke of Cambridge was ready to oppose him; the Duke of Cambridge, who before now has kept the field when the Pretender fled out of it. His arrival would not raise the fiege of Barcelona, but it would animate the befieged, that this instance of the prevalence of the cause of liberty in so powerful a nation as Great Britain had this reinforcement. His arrival make of both in would tyranny Duke of them both to the After the become

I sha vinced against bridge gence of proclam though and I a

his very good ef

arrival would not break the peace, but it would make our affairs more confirmed and cemented both in time of peace and in case of a war. It would not change the nature of a French tyranny, or reduce the exorbitant power of the Duke of Lorrain; but it would certainly render them both less formidable to all who are friends to the Succession in the House of Hanover. After the questions, he infinuates in his reflections above, that a bufy behaviour would not become his Grace the Duke of Cambridge: and I agree with him that it would not, but his very residence in England would have all the good effects above-mentioned.

I shall add to these answers, that I am convinced the Court thinks it an argument of safety against the Pretender, that the Duke of Cambridge is coming; and I attribute to an intelligence of it, before the publick knew it, that a proclamation against the said Pretender was thought unnecessary.

Nº 7.

ind.

dan-

they

that nces

any

ngst

al of

olish

l of

mo-

im-

afion

ince

him,

fty's

ER'S

at it

iem,

ions,

rous

eady who eten. raise mate ence ation His rival

N° 8. Friday, May 7, 1714.

Refinata bibis vina, falerna fugis.

MART.

THE following letter, written in that style the praise of which is simplicity, may be useful to that part of the world who are never quite drunk or sober, but go to bed mellow every night. I believe, as it is written by a vintner, he designed it particularly for the use of some good club that use his house, and who he fears might be succeeded by a more temperate generation, if they should drop off; be sides that, it is remarkable, sets of tipplers go fast one after another, when one of their number is taken from among them.

'To the READER.

'SIR,

THE Love, which by your Paper you feen to have for your country, gives a good example for others to follow, and prompts me in pa

Nº 8.

paffe

· I

Porti

elect

tave

ing the brou

fredhone their

mer own

dou

rou the hac in t Nº 8

in particular, to represent to you a conversation I have had of late, in which some things passed, which, I think, are not improper to be communicated to the English Reader.

formerly traded much to France, Spain, and Portugal, and in a town where we have (not-withstanding all the contrasts occasioned by elections) still so much humanity left among some of us as to meet now and then at a tavern.

Not long fince some of our merchants, have ing their doctor with them, meeting there, the master of the house, according to order, brought up one bottle of claret, and one of red-port, and assured the company upon his honour, they were both neat, and slowers in their kind.

You know, Sir, the honour of this fort of men is very great when they are vending their own goods; and that it is common with some of them to pawn their salvation, after such a manner as if they thought we had reason to doubt them.

Well, Sir, a glass of each fort was drunk round to the Queen. The French merchants in the company liked the flavour of a wine they had formerly, with much pleasure, drunk in that country; but at the same time owned

ir

MART

nay be never mellow he used who

e teme ff; be lers go od exots me

heretofore in France. To which it was replied, "That this was the effect of their age Nº 8.

" ations

" a fma

" and r

" tution

" after

" goes

" well,

" next

" four

" next

" an e

" gene

" head

" rare

" ing

" pen,

" ill f

" on

" thro

" little

of th is stand

" in to

" furt

" upo

" not

" tem

" the

" ations.

se A

Nº 8.

(which wanted a stronger liquor), and not of the wine which they now drank; and that, to take off this inconvenience, the quantity

· should be enlarged, and, instead of one bottle apiece, they should drink two.

The vintner, who stood by, smiled at this,

and could not forbear faying, "That gentleman was much in the right, and he was of the fame opinion."

'The Doctor (who all this while feemed to amuse himself with his pipe), being observed to prefer the port, was defired to give his opinion of these two forts of wine in general: upon which he replied, "Gentlemen, I will " do it readily; but must, by way of preface " to my discourse, desire only to know, whether " you would drink wine for pleasure or for " health? if you fay for pleasure, I shall be apt " to reply, You are then better friends to the "men of my profession, than to yourselves and "your own families. I think it would be un-" pardonable in me to advise any man to drink " or eat to his prejudice. Which of these two forts of wine, Port or Bourdeaux, is fittest " for the common draught of England, will " evidently appear from the following confiderN° 8, ial as s rer age ot of that, ntity this, entle-

ed to erved e his eral: will eface ether for e apt o the and un-

ittest will ider-

ions.

" ations. Let a man drink of Port, it shall in " a small quantity answer the design of wine. " and neither injure his pocket nor his confti-"tution. One, two, or three glaffes, at or " after dinner, and the like quantity before he "goes to bed, makes him digest his meat " well, fleep kindly, and wake refreshed the " next morning. This man has feldom any " four rifings, or any fickness at stomact the " next day. Indeed, if he happens to drink to "an excess over night, he may, from the " generofity of the liquor, complain of his "head, but rarely of his stomach. It is a very " rare thing to fee a man disgorge after drink-"ing good port wine; and when it does hap-" pen, it is scarce ever known to be with those "ill symptoms which often attend a debauch "on claret. In the former case, the matter "thrown up is feldom offenfive; in the latter, " little better than verjuice. And for the truth

"in town and country.

"And now, gentlemen, (to go on a little further in the way of my profession, and build upon the foundation I have laid), as you cannot but have heard, that many chronical differences, and not a few of the acute, do, in

" of this observation, I appeal to all the old

" ftanch drunkards of these two sorts of wine

"the opinion of the best physicians, take their

"rise, in a great degree, from indigestion, you cannot but allow, that where there is so much indigestion, as of course must follow from the drinking of French wine habitually, the ill effects of it must be very great: and active cordingly we find among the topers of greatest reputation, who survive those who have been long dead-drunk, and are troubled with the gout, stone, rheumatism, much more of these diseases may, upon a fair computation, be imputed to French, than to Portugal wine."

"But," fays a French merchant then in company, "do we not find by experience, "that French wine exhilarates beyond all other forts imported into this island? do not our great wits, and men of the best conversation, prefer it to all others? are not deep councils and great dispatches owing to this wine? and is not the best society chiefly kept up by it?

of warmth, "I do not find but that men among us who have drunk little or none of the French wines, have had as much wit, and wisdom too, as any of those who have drunk most of them. Mr. Shakespear, I dare say, drank but little claret; old Ben's wine was Canary; Mr. Waller was not fond

Nº 8.

" fond

" am c

" ner o

" Greece

" claret

" Virgi

" the a

" and

" play

" argu

" prop

" it),
" shal

" end

" fucl

" tim

" it i

" ger

"a

" wir

you nuch from the

Nº 8.

Nº 8.

acatest

the of uta-

aga!

in nce, ther

our on, cils

up up

ng ien of

ve I

ot ot "fond of any wine, only now and then (as I am credibly informed) enough to wash his head and temples with. There is no manner of doubt but that Spain, Italy, and Greece, have produced as great wits as any nation in Europe; and is this owing to French claret? did Homer, Aristophanes, Horace, Virgil, and Miguel de Cervantes, drink French claret?

"But, Sir, (because I will be easy to you in "the argument) grant that French wine will " make an Englithman chearful and pleafant, " and fit him to-write a fong, a poem, or a " play; or to tell his flory, and make his ad-"dress with an air extraordinary; is this an " argument why this wine should be made a " national drink? let the men of wit have their " proportion of this wine (if they must have "it), and take the inconveniencies of it; but " shall we set up for a nation of wits? let us " endeavour at a little discretion, and drink of " fuch wines, in fuch proportions, and at fuch "times, as shall answer the design of this great " bleffing to mankind; that is, fo as to make "it most conducive to our health; which, I "positively aver, in English constitutions, " generally speaking, is better preserved by " a proper use of Portugal than of French " wines."

Nº 8.

we at · lars,

·I

fay,

betw

custo

is ge

who

The

that clare

make

ufed,

ill e

· ufe o

This argument of the Doctor's made the greater impression on the company, for that we knew him to be no way concerned in merchandize; and that, as his age and profession had given him opportunity to make observations of the matter he spoke of; so the entire love he has for his country will not suffer him to advance any proposition, which he thinks is not for the good of it.

Sir, I am the more ready to communicate to you the fum of this conversation, for that I remember about thirty years fince, when London claret (as it was then called) was in fashion, the master with whom I then lived in the city, with many others, made that wine, by mixing Bourdeaux with red of the Spanish grape, which gave a composition more grateful to the palate, and less injurious to the stomach, than the French wine was of itfelf. These hands of mine have thus brewed many a ton.

'I hope it may not be amiss if I endeavour,
'as far as in me lies, to set forth in a proper light this great error in our liquors, and from good and undeniable arguments beat down that impetuous, humourfome, unreasonable, overweening love for claret, which, to the great prejudice of the English nation, does fo much prevail among us; and shew that

6 we

Nº 8.

0 8.

the

hat

er-

fion

va-

tire

ffer

he

cate

hat

hen

s in

ved

that

the ore

f it-

wed

our,
oper rom
own
ble,
the
does

we we

we act in this, as in too many other particulars, as if our welfare and happiness were the least part of our care.

'I have heard a very experienced Vintner fay, that he had observed great difference between the tempers of his claret and port-customers. The old age of the claret drinker is generally peevish and fretful; that of him who uses port, calm, and at the worst dull. The blood of a claret drinker grows vinegar, that of your port-man, mum. The effect of claret is to make men restless, of port; to make them sleepy. But port, moderately used, had all the good effects which can come from the best claret, and none of the ill effects which flow from the immoderate use of itself. I am, Sir,

'Your most humble servant,
'RUBURB HEARTY.'

N° 9. Monday, May 10, 1714.

Nefas animam præferre pudori.

Juv.

HAVE found by following the whispers of the town, that my Paper Number 4, which bore at the top of it the same piece of Latin which I have affixed to this, has very much revived a fort of feeling, which for fome time had been utterly loft among many people, and is commonly called the testimony of a good conscience. My discourse on that day was taken from a hint of MACHIAVEL, and explained that state of mind which that great politician calls " Nonfense to the Conscience." The description I gave there is this, " Non-" fense to the Conscience is when the party has " arrived to fuch a difregard to reason and " truth, as no: to follow it, or acknowledge it "when it presents itself to him." All the impudent, to a man, are masters of this great qualification for rifing in the world. Whoever is the author of the paper called "The Weekly "Packet," let him look to it; for he has printed

N° 9.

printed Majefty
most for Conscience
24th ha

On the

* thre

the net kingde ledge made difficult motive our do ducing fatisfact Our of the of zea vinced being l It is c ad, it

ver wa

printed a speech as if spoken by his Sicilian Majesty, which begins with a paragraph in the most sublime degree formed from Nonsense of Conscience. The said packet of April the 24th has it thus:

On the 22d of March, the States of Sicily met, and the King being feated on the throne, made the following speech to them.

JV.

of

ich

tin

ich

me

and

boo

was

ex-

reat

ce."

on-

has

and

re it

im.

reat

ever

ekly

has

inted

the necessities and advantage of this faithful kingdom, the dominion whereof we acknowledge we have received at the hand of God, made us very willingly difregard, not only the dissibilities of the voyage, but also the other motives, which the condition of the rest of our dominions might have furnished for inducing us to retard our coming, and defer the satisfaction we have in this assembly.

of the kingdom here affembled, is so much the greater, in that we have found you full of zeal and affection towards us, and convinced of the affurance you ought to have of being looked upon with a fatherly love.

It is certain this was never spoken, for if it ad, it had been the most solemn banter that ver was put upon any assembly of people.

A a All

All the world knows that the contingencies in the interests of European princes produced that alotment of empire to the Duke of Savoy; and no man can suppose that a prince of his good understanding, without regard to facts so no. toriously known, would sap dash put his "Divine right and fatherly love" upon a crowd of reasonable creatures, who knew well enough who made him their king, and that he was become their father without their adoption. man shall make me believe this speech was ever spoken; for if it had, it had been a stroke of paffive obedience in the subject to the divine right of Sicily, not to have laughed-out in the presence of their new-made monarch. There is fomething fo great in the nature of men, that they are not to be ruled but upon the principles of reason and justice; and absolute power cannot poffibly fubfift without the extirpation of arts and sciences, without the strictest administration of justice, to which if a monarch ties himself, it is for his ease and glory to govern by laws of his people's own making. All demagogues keep themselves in fashion by the force of Nonsense to the Con-.fcience; but politicians know they are undone when they are reduced to it. Shame and confusion for hard usage of their fellow-creatures, arifing from a deference they owe to them as rational, rational manife tected. by the Confcithe minfenfil paffes infenfil

Nº 9.

happy the vul crowd probati

From all the kind; if with a property to make wicked fo. Figure charity proper cerned use; if safe by fense co

Monito

9.

in

hat

and

boo

no-Di-

l of

agh

be-

No

was

oke

vine

t in

rch.

e of

the

lute

ex-

the

if a

and

own es in

Con-

done

con-

ures,

n as

onal,

rational, would disable their progress upon any manifest false step in which they should be detected. But demagogues are never confounded by their errors, but from their Nonsense of Conscience, go on in committing more, under the manifest dislike of all the world, and are infenfible of any thing that is criminal which passes with impunity. Men of such coarse and infenfible spirits, can fancy themselves in an happy condition as long as they can deceive the vulgar; and would prefer a power over a crowd of Barbarians, to the applause and approbation of a few polite Athenians.

From this Nonsense of Conscience proceed all the evils which can possibly betide mankind; for it naturally brings men to be fatisfied with appearances instead of things, and is apt to make an ill man believe that he is not wicked, because nobody dares tell him he is fo. For this reason I have done an act of charity, by fending a couple of letters to two certain persons by messengers who were very proper to carry them. If the gentlemen concerned will read them, it may be of very great use; if not, I have done my duty, and they are fafe by their impregnable armour, the Nonsense of Conscience. One of these epistles I have fent by the Examiner, the other by the Monitor. The first is as follows.

Aa2

· I am

Nº 9.

more

us in

· T

· T a pro

' peop

cause

T

· He

he k

'fwer,

' being

' fince

in the

to th

other

trium

' which

ther

well-

· lowin

of I treat

I am told there is of late fuch a liberty taken in opening letters, that I would not fend this by any but the bearer, who loves you at his foul, and has hazarded it for your fer-The inclosed, called "A Letter to the 'Examiner," is what you ought to give him instructions to answer, and not defert the poor man, who has done nothing but repeated the word Faction for some weeks last past. writer of the letter bids him examine the methods of negotiating the peace by the 8th article of the grand alliance; and defires him to shew, that the part acted in the field, while the peace was transacting, was the most effectual way to fecond what was doing at · Utrecht. 'That the scheme of a general peace agreed between us and France, is better than that defigned by the preliminaries of 1709. 'That the peace was general at the time we figned.

'That the fettling of the Spanish monarchy in the house of Bourbon, is no addition of frength and power to France.

'That it can be no prejudice to us, that France is permitted to trade to the West Indies, which they never were before.

'That it would have been the fame thing to the trade of Great Britain, to whomever · Spain and the Indies had been given.

· That

· 9.

rty

not

you

ferthe

nim

oor

The

the 8th

him

eld,

nost

reed

that

e we

rchy

n of

that

t In-

'That King Philip will not favour France more than England, nor the French undersell us in their markets.

- 'That Portugal is in no danger of becoming 'a province to Spain.
- 'That the Catalans are not an unfortunate people from their adherence to the common cause.
- 'That the method taken in the demolition of Dunkirk agrees with the letter of the treaty.
- 'He adds abundance of other questions, which 'he knows in his own Conscience need no answer, the justice of what he excepts against being visible to all the world. But, however, since there are some specious odd infinuations in the book, I beg of you to speak intelligibly to the bearer, and surnish him with answers; otherwise the man must go on in an empty triumph, from the Nonsense of Conscience, which renders him unable to do you any surstee fervice, to the great grief of all your well-wishers, who are enumerated in the sollowing blank.'

My

A 2 3

never

That

ng to

My second letter, carried by the MONITOR, is as follows.

'THE bearer I send to you, because I know you have a respect for one of the persons concerned in his following expression in the Monitor of Saturday. "Fears and appreshensions of remote slavery, and of a concerned temptible destitute Pretender, are contrary to all reason." This is plain disrespect to the Duke of Lorrain, to call a man destitute and contemptible, who is under his protection. Just after the pardon granted to Mr. Bed. Ford*, he has the impudence to arraign her

* HILKIAH BEDFORD, fon of a mathematical instrumentmaker in Hosier-lane, was born July 23, 1663; and in 1679 was admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, the first scholar on the foundation of his maternal grandfather William Plat. He was afterwards elected fellow of his college, and patronized by Heneage Finch earl of Winchelfea; but being deprived of his preferment (which was in Lincolnshire) for refusing to take the oaths at the Revolution, kept afterwards a boarding-house for the Westminster scholars. In 1714, being tried in the court of King's-bench, he was fined 1000 marks, and imprisoned three years, for writing, printing, and publishing "The Hereditary "Right of the Crown of England afferted, 1713," folio; the real author of which was George Harbin, a Nonjuring clergyman, whom his friendship thus screened; and on account of his sufferings he received 2001. from the Lord Weymouth, who knew not the real author. His other publications were, a translation of "An answer to Fontenelle's History of Oracles," and a Latin . Life

" und " a C

Nº 9.

" Maje

' in th

" cles

" tue

for bear

" Life English of Wil cated at pital 17 which h by his f John C don, Su fician at " Univ. and live 1776, fumme of that ing the daught 1748) but ret his wid of who hall;

died ad

marrie

ror,

con-

precony to

the and ion.

her jesty

ment-1679 cholar He

oaths or the three ditary

yman, ufferknew on of Latin Life 'Majesty of being guilty of mercy to a fault, in these words; "This nation is at present under the blessing of a pacific reign under a Queen whose personal behaviour is untainted with crime (except that of too much clemency), a Queen who is a pattern of virtue and piety."

'I hope you will take the proper methods for doing justice in this case, by sending the bearer to the stocks; for being exalted to

"Life of Dr. Barwick," which he afterwards translated into English. He died Nov. 26, 1724. - By his wife Alice, daughter of William Cooper, Esq; he had three sons; 1. William, educated at St. John's college (appointed physician to Christ's hofpital 1746, and Register of the College of Physicians, London, of which he was fellow and cenfor, and died July 11, 1747, leaving by his second wife an only daughter Elizabeth, married 1778 to John Claxton, Eiq; of Lincoln's-Inn, and of Shirley near Croy. don, Surrey, F. A. S) 2. Thomas, a divine. And, 3. John, phyfician at Durham, who used to fign himself " John Bedford, M. D. "Univ. Patav." About the year 1761 he retired from practice, and lived remarkably recluse. John was thrice married; died in 1776, very rich; and left a fon, Hilkiah, who was entered in the fummer of 1768 of St. John's college, Cambridge; became a fellow of that college, and a counsellor; and died at York, whilft attending the circuit, in 1779 .- Dr. John Bedford had also two daughters; one of whom died fingle in 1765; the other (born in 1748) was married in 1766 to Mr. Hill, formerly a linen-draper, but retired from trade with a plentiful fortune, which he left to his widow .- The first-mentioned Hilkiah had also three daughters, of whom Christian the elder married George Smith, Esq; of Burnhall; Elizabeth married 50 years to the Rev. Mr Gordoun, who died advanced in years within a week after her, Oct. 1779; Mary married to Mr. John Soleby, druggist, in Holbourn.

Aa4

' public

public yiew and a higher pedestal, is a dif.

' tinction which he has known already; and is fo little the better for it, that he calumniates the clemency which he has fince known by a pardon for subsequent offences.

If you, who are a justice of peace, let these things pass, I can only say with Mr. BAYES, I'll write no more."

Advertise

in a ne Amours, An in mistres incestry, autonio, fake of puzzle pril, fi

Arbiter E Aristotle, Aronces, uthors,

INDEX

dif.
id is iates

hefe YEs,

EX

N D E X

TO THE

L O V E R.

A.

A BEDNEGO the Jew, how he bubbled Sir Anthony Crabtree with a pretended manuscript, N° 11.

Idvertisement about written dances, N° 4. dultery, the great crime of it, N° 36. How punished in a negro in Virginia, ibid.

mours, criminal, the evils heaped up in them, N° 9.
An instance in the story of a German Count and his mistress, ibid.

Incestry, how fond the Crabtrees are of it, N° 11. 16.
Intonio, in Venice preserved, betrays his country for the sake of a woman that hates him, N° 12. A grimpuzzled leacher, ibid.

pril, first of, a day auspicious to the Crabtrees, No 16.

Arbiter Elegantiarum, the Lover's office, N° 3. Iristotle, his saying of justice, N° 32.

fronces, his complaint about Country Dances, N' 3.
Authors, half-sheet, their care to improve mankind, No.

1. Little ones glad of applause on any account, 5.

Must

utcher,

tree pai

II

Must not take money, 39. It makes them translate ill ibid.

B

Bacon, Lord, his faying of the happiness of government in employing men of books and leisure, N° 22.

Barrow, Dr. his discourse of contentment recommended N° 26. His great merit, ibid.

Bateman, Sir James, the first proposer of the fine cieling at Greenwich Hospital, N° 33.

Bays, Lancelot, his letter and petition to be the lover esquire, N 17. His toy-shop of written baubles, ibid

Behn, Mrs. understood the practic part of love bette than the speculative, N 23.

Benefits, the doing and receiving them the nicest part of commerce, N 12.

Bickerstaff, Isaac, Esq. rightly termed the TATLER, N° 23 Blite, leader of the lover's vagabond, N° 3.

Bookman, Sir Anthony Crabtree's quarrel with him

Bretagne, the Dance fo called, No 4.

Brickdust, Peter, a Kinsman of the Crabtrees, has the face of a cat and an owl, N° 11. His vile character ibid. Sir Anthony Crabtree's accuser, ibid. and 14 and voucher, 16. More hideous if possible than Si Anthony Crabtree, 21. What his phiz is fit for, ibid.

Britain, designed for a dancing island by the French

Brook, Lord, what he faid of the wearifome condition of mortality, N° 32.

Brittleness, things valued by the ladies for it, N° 10. Buckingham, late Duke of, the great improver of the manufacture of glass in England, N° 34. Busby, Dr. his genius for education, N° 27.

Budgell, Mr. his translation of the characters of Theophrastus recommended, N° 394

Butcher

areless, 20. aftlesoap

N' 14. Cato, tra

dance, Censoriou Cercopithec

Charles I.

Claudian Claywrig Crabti

Clidamir her, N Coach, a N 5. Conjuga Contents

Country
Courtly, of wi Cowley, Crabtree

fhire, terian Their Like ibid.

....

utcher, of St. James's Market, how Sir Anthony Crabtree paid him what his lady owed him, N' 21.

C.

nment careless, Mr. of the Middle-Temple, his character, No asslesoap, Ephraim, his letter about the Crabtrees,

N' 14. lato, tragedy of, its perfection, N° 5.

late ill

nended

cieling

lover'

es, ibid

bette

h him

has th

aracter

nd 14

han Si

, ibid.

French

ition o

10.

of th

f Theo

utcher

cenfor of Great-Britain, by whom to be taken out to dance, N° 4.

Censoriousness, how it exposes itself, No 24.

Cercopitheci, the Crabtrees like them, N° 16. Charles II. the licenses of his Court, N° 2.

part o China-ware, the folly of being fond of it, No 10.

Claudian, of Dancing, No 4.

N° 23 Claywright, Rubens, his letter about the pictures of the Crabtrees on his potter's ware, N° 21.

Clidamira, her letter to desire her lovers might fight for her, N° 28.

Coach, an adventure upon calling one, No 18.

Comedy, fine gentleman of, how dangerous a character, Conjugal AFFECTION, the great relief of it in distress, N° 8. Contentment, the duty of it, N° 26.

Country gentlemen have too healthy countenances, N° 5. Courtly, Ned, a Coxcomb, preferred to Meanwell, a man of wit, by a lady, and why, N 25.

Cowley, Abraham, an ill doctor in love, No 23.

Crabtrees, a mischievous, ridiculous family in Herefordshire, No 11. &c. Their ugly faces, ibid. Bred Presbyterians, turn High-Churchmen, ibid. Hated, 14. 21.
Their logic, ibid. A most unaccountable race, ibid.
Like the Cercopitheci, 16. How fond of ancestry, ibid. First of April, their auspicious day, ibid. An execrable race, 21. A graceless crew, ibid. Where
their

their efficies are to be feen, ibid. Sir Anthony, whata antiquary he is, ibid. Vide Antonio in Venice pre ferved, 12. His motto, 14. How he faved the hou of Sir Ralph his father, ibid. His fneaking look, ibid His behaviour towards an illustrious family, ibid. His Superstition, 16. Why he formed the South Sea pro ject, ibid. His curiosities, ibid. He quarrels with the bookman, and loses his whisperers, ibid. What his levees were made up of, ibid. How he cheated a lady that employed him, Susan Matchless, and her father What an ungainly creature, ibid. His awkward little, and briskly comic air, ibid. Insensible of shame and as fmug as he is ugly, ibid. What the lady who employed him loft by him, ibid. Sir Ralph would burn his house, because fornication had been committed in it, 14. Sir Robert a knight before the flood, 11. Zachariah's clumfy character, ibid. How he comes into a wench's chamber, 14. A rare voucher in the bufiness of conveyances, 16. An half-witted, impotent wretch, 21. More hideous than Sir Anthony, ibid, What a rare trustee he is, ibid.

Crimes, how aggravated, N' 32. Curiofities, Sir Anthony Crabtree's collection, N' 16.

D,

Dancing, promitcuous, its danger, N° 3.

Defires, loofe, their own punishment, N° 8.

Diana, her amour with Endymion, N° 13.

Discontented temper, taken out of Theophrastus's characters, N° 39.

Doubt, Charles, his letter for advice in the choice of his mistres, N 19.

Dreams of Endymion, No 13.

D'Urfey, Mr. the celebrated, has met with envy as well as opposition, N° 40. How related to the Marquis D'Urfey, fey, the ibid.

D'Urfeys, Dulcet, I a fictiti

I

Emilia at Endymio Epictetus, Evil, a g Eye-lid, for lo

> Flattery N° 2 Flavia,

Eyes, b

Giving, Glafs, Eng Gothan

Gallant

No : Gothar
curs

Grame Green Gubbi

Guml

fey, the author of the French romance called ASTRÆA, ibid.

"Urfeys, the family of them in France, No 40.

Dulcet, Mrs. how she was abused in conversation, though a fictitious person, No 24.

Duftgown, Clidamira, her Character, No 15.

E.

Emilia and Philander, their Amour, N' 37.

Endymion's dreams, N' 13.

what a

ice pre

e houf

k, ibid

d. Hi

ea provith the

nat his la lady

father

kward.

fliame,

ly who

d burn

tted in d, 11. es into

e bufi-

potent ibid.

cha-

f his

well 'Ur-

fey,

Epictetus, his saying of brittle ware, N' 10.

Evil, a good method to avoid it, No 32.

Eye-lid, Anthony, his letter of complaint against a lady for looking out at window, N' 30.

Eyes, battle of, N' 7.

F.

Flattery, the most successful way of winning women, No 25.

Flavia, her ill choice in Marriage, N° 37.

G.

Gallantry, modern, nothing but debauchery, No 36.

Giving, the art of it in lovers, No 12.

Glass, manufacture of, by whom and how improved in England, N 34.

Gotham, the habitation of the Crabtrees in Herefordshire, Gothamites at last find out the Crabtrees to be no cunning curs, N° 16.

Grame, James, his letter about his pictures, N' 12.

Greenwich Hospital, the excellent painting there, No 33.

Gubbin, Timothy, his letter for advice in his amour, No. 17. 19.

Gumley, Mr. his glass gallery described, N' 34.

H.

H.

Hale, Sir Matthew, his discourse of religion, N° 29. Heart, to speak from it in public the surest way of success, N° 18. How mended by honourable love, 29.

I.

Idolatry, what makes it a crying fin, N° 32.

Jenny Lipsey, her character, N° 15.

Inhumanity, how odious with wantonness, N° 9.

Injustice, the great fin of it with respect to our neighbours and ourselves, N° 32.

Johnson, Mr. one of the Lover's affistants, his character.

Johnson, Mr. one of the Lover's affistants, his character,

Islands, dancing ones, N° 4.

Judges, their dancing, N° 4.

Judgment goes beyond experience, N° 22.

Justice, all virtues contained in it, N° 32.

K.

King, grieving for his wife's death, how reproved by a Philosopher, N° 26.
King William and Queen Mary, their picture at Greenwich Hospital described, N° 33,

Knight-errantry, how corrupted, Nº 2.

L.

Languenti, Ricardetto, his letter about the Crabtrees, N 16.

Languissante, Cinthio, his sublime unintelligible letter, N° 19.

Lasie, Charles, the rover, his letter, No 23.

Letter, from a Sabine Lady to her mother, a little while after the famous rape of the Romans, No 6. About the the ba her hu Mr. P his mi fhire, the C From Georg the C 15. 16. Bays, guissan Sufan bens potte tions mistr fathe Myrt the p ing c to N claffi to re ibid. mistr Anth Ralp

Pip,

Abo

a lac Lodge,

Defe Levées the battle of the eyes, 7. From Mrs. Penruddock to her husband, the day before he was to suffer death. 8. Mr. Penruddock's answer, ibid. From a man leaving his mistress to marry, q. From Gotham in Herefordthire, about the mischievous and ridiculous family of the Crabtrees, II. A nice one from a lady, 12. From James Grame, about his pictures, ibid. From George Powel, 13. From Ephraim Castlesoap, about the Crabtrees, 14. Madam Duftgown's to her lover. 15. From Ricardetto Languenti, about the Crabtrees. 16. From Timothy Gubbins, 17. 19. From Lancelot Bays, 17. From Charles Doubt, 19. From Cinthio Languiffante, ibid. From Prudence Lovefick, 20. From Susan Matchless, about the Crabtrees, 21. From Rubens Claywright, about the Crabtrees' pictures on his potter's ware, ibid. About the fittest age and qualifications for business, 22. Two letters from a lover to his mistress, one to be read by herself, and another by her father, ibid. From Charles Lasie, 23. Marmaduke Myrtle's to a Censorious lady, 24. From Vesuvius of the power of Love, 25. From a gentleman about afflicting one's felf for the death of a wife, 26. Mr. Myrtle to Mr. Severn on Mr. Maittaire's new edition of the classics, in 12mo, 27. From a lady, to desire her lover to refuse her, 28. The answer, 30. From Clidamira, ibid. From Giles Limberham, about his inconstant mistress, 28. From ULYSSES Transmarinus, 30. From Anthony Eyelid, Ch. Busie, Tallboy Gapeseed, and Ralph Doodle, about staring ladies, ibid. From Tim. Pip, 31. From an old batchelor fallen in Love, 31. About Miranda's love of flattery, 35. From Tom. Truelove, ibid. From Philander to Emilia, 38. From a lady betrayed by a she-friend, ibid.

Lodge, Lover's, where Powell's puppet-show was, No 2. Described, ibid.

Levées, Sir Anthony Crabtree's, described, N 16.

Limberham,

9. access,

bours

racter,

by a

nwich

trees,

etter,

while bout the Limberham, Giles, his letter of complaint against his kept mistress, N° 28.

Love, passion of, leads to every thing truly excellent, great, and noble, N° 1. 5. Instance out of Cato, ibid. Its power over all forts of men, 15. When honourable, how it mends the heart, 29. One of the fundamental laws of nature, 32. The chief end of The Lover, 36. Feigned more likely to succeed than true, 37.

Lover, the design of that Paper, N° 1. The characters of the Author's affistants, ibid. Of himself, ibid. An account of his passion for Mrs. Ann Page, 2. He meets her, 5. Disappointments he has met with by it, 14.

Lovers, vagabond, an order of Adventurers, No 3. Their leader's character, ibid.

Lovefick, Prudence, her letter, N° 20. Her generosity to her Lover, ibid.

M.

Maittaire, Mr. his new edition of the classics, in 12m2, recommended, N° 27.

Marcius, refigns Thalestrina to his rival, Nº 6.

Matchless, Susan, her letter about the Crabtrees, N° 21. Meanwell, loses his mistress for his sincerity, N° 25.

Minuets, with meanings, No 4.

Miramantis, the Sabine, her letter to her mother, N° 6. Miranda's character, N° 35.

Mischievous and ridiculous words made for the family of the Crabtrees, N° 21.

Monitor, a horrid Paper, No 34. The author a heavy rogue, ibid.

Mortality, the wearisome condition of it, No 32.

Motto, a notable one on Sir Anthony Crabtree's coach, No 14.

Myrtle, Marmaduke, author of The Lover, No 2. His lodging, ibid. His letter to a censorious lady, No 24.

Negro, ginia, Neighbo Nice, Si

Ofwald, for h

> Painting Peace, Pedlar, tree, Penrud

> Page, I

Philand her, Pip, T

Platon Potter

the Powell

Prince Public do

N.

N.

is kept

great,

irable,

mental

, 36.

ers of An meets

4.

Their

lity to 2m),

21.

6.

y of

eavy

ach,

His

N.

Negro, the tragical story of an adulterous one in Virginia, N° 36.

Neighbours, the sin of injuring them, N° 32.

Nice, Sir Courtly, the Mirror of sops, N° 18.

o

Oswald, Mr. the widower, his character, N° 1. His love for his wife's memory, 29. Ovid, the Galen of love, N° 23.

P.

Page, Mrs. Anne, the Author's love for her, N° 2.

Paintings of Greenwich Hospital described, N° 33.

Peace, the whole nation to learn to dance upon it, N° 4:

Pedlar, an honest one, how abused by Sir Anthony Crabtree, N° 14, Penruddock, Mrs. her letter to her husband, condemned to die, N° 8. His answer, ibid.

Philander and Emilia, their amour, N° 37. His letter to her, 38.

Pip, Tim. his pretensions to a lady from seeing her topsyturvy, N° 31.

Platonic lovers, their indifference, No 34.

Potter's ware of Britain, its use, N° 10. The effigies of the Crabtrees to be seen on some of it, N° 21.

Powell, George, his behaviour as to love and honour, No 13.

Prince, Jo. his entertainments in dancing, No 40.

Publick (speaking in it), with what Confusion Englishmen do it, N° 18. The cause of it, ibid.

Bb

R.

R.

Rape, Sabine, the behaviour of some of the ladies then,

Religion, Sir Matthew Hale's discourse of it, N° 29.
Reproach, the most painful things to lovers, N° 34.
Robin, the treasurer, what Suckling says of him, N° 21.
Romans, their public spirit, N° 26.
Room, how to leave it handsomely, N° 3.

S.

Sabine lady, her letter to her mother from Rome, after the famous rape by the Romans, Nº 6.

Scandal a fault in the ladies, No 24.

Severn, Mr. his character, N° 1. Marmaduke Myrtle's letter to him, about Mr. Maittaire's edition of the Clasfics in 12mo, N° 27.

Sins of the fecond table, No 32.

Sloven, character of one, out of Theophrastus, N° 39.

Stage debauched in Charles II's reign, N° 2. Its influence on manners, N°5.

T.

Taciturnity, when a fault, No 18.

Tale of a Tub, written for the Advancement of religion, N° 16. Sir Anthony Crabtree borrows his Southfea project from it, ibid.

Theophrastus's characters, well translated by Mr. Budgell, Thornhill, his excellent painting at Greenwich, N° 33. Tin-tallies, a coin much in use by the Crabtrees, N° 21.

Transmarinus Ulosses, his letter about his father's betraying him in an amour, N° 30.

Town, how to qualify one's felf for it, N' 5. Toy-shop, poetical, Lancelot Bayes's, N° 17.

Translation,

Tranflation
True-love
herfelf Twilight,

I

Verses or

Whiffle, N° 7. Whifper

them,

Wildgoo N° 1. Witwoo

Women The

flatte 37• hufb: Wormv Translation, rules for it, N° 39.

True-love, Tom, his letter to his mistress, not to promise herself by denial, No 35.

Twilight, Madam, her character, No 15.

V.

Verses on dancing, N° 4.

W.

Whiffle, Tom. his letter about the battle of the eyes,

Whispers, Sir Anthony Crabtree's politics made up of them, No 11. He is at a sad loss for want of them, 16.

Wildgoose, Mr. one of the Lover's assistants, his character, Witwood, Miss, her affectation of wit, N° 25.

Women, the greatest sufferers in criminal amours, N° 9. The several ways men take to gain them, 25. Won by stattery, ibid. Apt to prefer seigned love to true 37. And to be directed by others in their choice of husbands, ibid.

Wormwood, Will, his character, N° 39.

reli-South-

s then,

° 21.

fter the yrtle's

e Clas.

9. ts in-

idgell,

33.

21. s be-ation,

INDEX TO THE READER.

A

A DMINISTRATION abused by the Examiner and Monitor, N° 5.

Alliance, 8th article of the grand one, how well observed in the late peace, N° 9.

Altar-piece at White-Chapel impious, N' I.

Assemblies, great, how to carry points in them, N° 4. Author of the Paper, his great reading, N° 1.

Authors, a wonder how they live, No I.

B.

Babes of grace, the Examiner's ministers such, No 7. Bourbon, house of, gets nothing by the addition of the Spanish monarch, No 9.

Bullymandra, a stupid doggrel term, given a great man by the Monitor, N° 8.

C

Cambridge, Duke of, his coming violently opposed by the Examiner, N° 2. The preamble to his Royal Highness's patent, ibid. Insulted by the Monitor, 7.

Catalans, not injured by us, N° 9.

Churchman, the Examiner a great one, No 7.

Claret, French, not drunk by ancient or modern wits, Coffee, dispirits people, N' 1.

Conscience, the nonsense of it discoursed of, N° 4. Will fail at last, ibid.

Converts, new ones in England, should not be purchasers, No 1.

Countryman, what one did in the defence of his country, and how he was rewarded, No 2.

Demago Difeafes Doctor, Dunkir thod

peac

Examir offer And ibid, deal denc ibid com His ibid

Flying oth French like of ibid

Exract

" I

Gener Ghibe and Godli

N° Grace

Harle Harle D.

Demagogues, never confounded, N° 9.
Diseases, occasioned by drinking French wine, N° 8.
Doctor, his opinion of Bourdeaux and Port wine, N° 8.
Dunkirk, how cleverly it is demolished, N° 5. The method taken to do it, agrees exactly with the treaty of peace, 9.

ER.

er and

bferved

4.

7.

of the

at man

by the

High-

wits,

Will

hafers,

untry,

D.

E.

Examiner has no conscience, N° 1. The greatest of all offenders, 2. Makes sport of the Catalans, ibid. And of the sear of France, Popery, and the Pretender, ibid. Insults the house of Hanover, ibid. A great dealer in nonsense, 3. Composed of malice and impudence, ibid. Set to write the Post Boy into reputation, ibid. An instance of his nonsense, 4. His employers commended, 5. The wicked design of his paper, 6. His falshood detected, ibid. His pious consolations, ibid.

Exract from a pamphlet, called "The Importance of Dunkirk confidered," N 5.

F.

Flying-Post, always wrong or right from one end to the other, No 1.

French King, how he treats his subjects when he does not like them, No 1. His great exactness in performance of treaties, 5. Particularly with respect to Dunkirk, ibid. And Mardyke, ibid. And renunciations, 6.

G.

General, the late peace wants to be proved so, N° 9. Ghibelins, the leader of them in Italy, a puzzle in body and mind, N° 4.

Godliness, the Examiner's masters had too much of it,

Grace, babes of, the Examiner's ministers such, No 7.

H.

Harcourt, originally French, N° 1. Harley, originally French, N° 1.

Hearty,

374 INDEX TO THE READER.

Hearty, Ruburb, his letter to the Reader, about French wine and Port, N° 8.

Hereditary right, what the affertors of it may expect from a prince of their principles, N' 1.

Honest, the people always so, N' 4.

I.

Impudent men, masters of Nonsense of the Conscience,

Job, the Oxford fool, represented by the Post-Boy, N° 3. Justices of the peace, the increase of ale-houses, N° 1.

L

Letter, from the Reader to the Sword-bearer of London, N° 5.

to Sir Miles Wharton, concerning occasional Peers, nonsense, N° 3. His writings represented by small beer in bottles, ibid. Has hit the sublime in nonsense, ibid.

Libellers, the greatest complain of libelling, No 4.

Library, one lent to the author of Hereditary Right afferted, Lords, the numerous creation of them, the greatest wound that can be given to the prerogative, N° 6. Do but crowd an assembly, if without merit, ibid.

Lover, a cheat, No 1.

Lies, made by the faction for a day, No 6.

M.

Marlborough, Duke of, his history written by Mr. Steele, N° 6.

Majorities, acted by the Nonsense of the Conscience, N° 4. Mardyke, what fifteen battalions were to do there, N° 5. Ministry, the danger of their making occasional lords, N° 6.

Monitor, the Examiner's younger brother, began like a pickpocket, N° 4. Infults the house of Hanover, ibid. Impudent and traiterous, 5. A hardened finner, 6.

His Duk

Nonfen High Dr. Nonfen

cour

Occafie No

Papers ibid Patien N°

Peace, Peers, the

Peers, Post-B

Post - N Pream

Preten of

Puzzle

Questi

Rogue

INDEX TO THE READER. 375

His infolence and stupidity, ibid. Writes against the Duke of Cambridge, 7. What pedestal in wood upon, 9.

N.

Nonfense, the Whig Examiner's definition of it, N° 3. High Nonsense and Low Nonsense distinguished, ibid. Dr. Sacheverell has hit the sublime in it in Divinity, ibid. Nonsense of the Understanding, and of the Conscience, discoursed of, N° 4. The impudent masters of the latter, 9.

_ 0

Occasional Lords, the danger of them to the people,

P.

Papers, weekly, great dryers, No 1. And false guides, ibid.

Patience, the Examiner's masters great teachers of it,

Peace, in what bad company the Examiner has put it, N° 2. Peers, occasional, a letter to Sir Miles Wharton about them, N° 6.

Peers, without patents, certain in Great-Britain, No 2.

Post-Boy, a considerable man, N° 1. Excellent in his kind, 3. How he resembles Job, the Oxford fool, ibid. Comes off as an ideot, ibid.

Post-Man, a neuter against his conscience, N° 1.
Preamble to the Duke of Cambridge's patent, N° 2.

Pretender, the furest way that was lately left us to get rid of him, N° 5.

Puzzle in body and mind, a man fo, No 4.

Q.

Questions, insolent ones of the Examiner, Nº 2.

R.

Rogues, scribbling, a parcel of them, the Examiner, Monitor, &c. N° 6.

3

S.

A from

French

cience, N° 3.

1.

Peers,

ondon,

aler in all beer ibid,

Merted,

wound Do but

Steele,

N° 4. I° 5. lords,

like a r, ibid. er, 6.

His

Sacheverell, Dr. has hit the fublime in nonfense, No 3. St. Fean, or St. John, originally French, No 1. Saints, all the Examiner's masters such, No 7.

Salifbury, Bishop of, what he says is to be expected from an hereditary-right king, No 1.

Sicilian majesty, what a fort of king he is, No Q. Sovereignty, when it is of right divine, N° 2.

Spain and the Indies, England not at all concerned in the disposal of them, No 9.

Spain, king of, as great a friend to England as to France, STEELE, Mr. his usage by the last Parliament, No 6. His proposals for writing the History of the War in Flanders, ibid.

Tiplers, go one after another, No 8. Trade, of the French to the West Indies, no loss to us, Nº q.

U.

Understanding, the nonsense of it discoursed of, N' 4.

W.

Wharton, Sir Miles, a letter to him about Occasional Lords N° 6.

Whig Examiner, his definition of nonfense, No 2.

Whigs, how ingenuously the Examiner has dealt by them, Their wisdom commended by him, 7.

White-Chapel, rector of, his impiety in the altar-piece fet up there, No 1.

Wine, French, not fo good as formerly, N° 8. - Port, more wholesome than claret, ibid.

Wrong fellows, in great affemblies, described, No 4. great man's orators, ibid.

7 JU66 FINIS.

2 ? m Barfred

3.

from

in the

rance,

His Flan-

to us,

Lords

them,

iece set

4. A